Richberg Fights Coal Mine Tie-up Of 350,000 Men

Monday Deadline Set by Workers

Strike Is Threatened in Textile Union Attack on NRA Ruling.

By Felix Bruner.

The NRA yesterday stepped into the controversy between bituminous miners and coal operators in an effort to avert a walkout of 350,000 miners next Monday.

Donald R. Richberg, chairman of the Recovery Board, said he had invited a joint committee of miners and operators to meet with the board today to try to iron out difficulties involving wages and hours.

The miners and operators met together again yesterday with no definite indication that they were near an agreement. The wage-scale agreement expires April 1, with no provision for its continuance. Miners are asking for a 30-hour week and an increase of 50 cents a day. Operators are resisting the demand.

Walkout Threatened.

"If a solution is not reached by Thursday, there will be real concern about the possibility of suspension of work," Richberg said.

Richberg said that if a solution appears impossible, the NRA will offer its services as a mediator.

Regardless of any attempt to mediate, however, it was stated that if a settlement is not reached by Monday the miners will not go to work. At the headquarters of the United Mine Workers of America it was stated that the failure of miners to go to work would not constitute a strike. It was explained that there would be no contract and union miners could not work without an agreement with employers.

A strange twist was given the situation that less than a week ago President Roosevelt appointed Philip Murray, vice president of the miners' union, a member of the NRA board. One of the first problems with which he will be confronted in his new job will be mediation between the organization of which he is an official and the employers with whom his organization has failed to reach an understanding.

Steel Firm's Challenge.

Meanwhile, NRA, shortly after withdrawing the Belcher test case from the Supreme Court, yesterday found itself faced with a suit in the high tribunal that it can not withdraw.

The action was brought by W. Ames & Co., Jersey City, N. J., and attacks the constitutionality of NRA. The company charges it is suffering a practical boycott because of its failure to sign the iron and steel code. It contends the recovery act is unconstitutional in that it attempts to regulate matters not within the Federal power, such as hours of labor and minimum wages.

Richberg, in his new job as head of NRA, was confronted with another threat of labor difficulties, coming from the United Textile

3 Bank Bandits In Wild Flight

2 Couples Kidnaped as Hostages After Shots Foil Holdup.

By the Associated Press.

Mauston, Wis., March 27.—Three gunmen, frustrated in an attempt to rob the State Bank of Mauston by the pluck of an assistant cashier—hero in a previous encounter with bandits—roared across southern Wisconsin in wild flight late today.

Within five hours the trio had seized four automobiles in succession, taking the occupants along as hostages in two instances.

When last sighted they were reported near Janesville, 100 miles from here, in the fourth car. Two couples were believed kidnaped by the robbers.

In their dash over slippery, snow-covered roads, the desperate trio first stopped a car driven by A. C. Woodcock, a few miles from the bank, took Woodcock and his wife as hostages, but then smashed into the rear of a trailer.

Next they seized an automobile driven by a woman, near Evansville, abandoning it soon for a third car which they forced to a stop. They took its two occupants along also.

When the last car stalled the robbers stopped another and sped away again.

The mad dash began this morning when Russell Hale, 33, assistant cashier of the Bank of Mauston, foiled their attempt to rob it at the cost of a wound in his shoulder. He emerged from the vault shooting and the robbers hastily retreated, dropping a tray full of money as they fled.

Peace-Time Spending Of U. S. Sets Record

By the United Press.

New peace-time spending records were broken by the Federal Government yesterday with costs exceeding the $5,000,000,000 mark in less than nine months of the current fiscal year to date.

Since the start of the current fiscal year on July 1, the bill for running the Federal Government reached $5,006,456,144, or 6 per cent above the previous peak peace-time rate of expenditures of $4,709,435,398 in the corresponding period of the previous fiscal year.

The rise in expenses, however, was more than offset by a greater rise in Government revenues because of increased tax collections. Revenues in this period amounted to $2,827,165,760, or 23 per cent ahead of income of $2,281,193,813 in the corresponding period of the previous fiscal year. As a result, the Government is "in the red" to the extent of $2,179,290,384, against $2,423,241,685 a year ago.

Fear of Revolt Over Sales Tax Stirs New York

Only $1,165,368 Turned Over to City as Civic Groups Protest.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 27.—Growing signs of rebellion among the taxpayers tonight had City Hall worried.

Comptroller Frank J. Taylor was so frankly concerned over the difficulties encountered in collecting the new municipal sales tax that he decided to ask the business men to "come through."

Taylor called the situation "psychological," and city officials blamed it on resentment growing out of last week's disclosures that employes of the emergency relief bureau had received salary increases.

$1,165,368 Taken by City.

With less than four days remaining for payment of the first installment of the 2 per cent tax, which merchants have been collecting from their customers since last December, only $1,165,368 had been turned over to the city out of an expected total of $14,000,000.

Returns had been received from only 16,000 of the 188,000 registered retailers, and Comptroller Taylor informed his advisory council that some stores in Brooklyn had posted signs in their windows reading: "Tax strike. Do not pay your taxes to the city."

Concurrently there was spreading through Brooklyn, Queens and Staten Island a growing spirit of defiance against a 50 per cent increase in the water tax.

Meetings Are Held.

Civic groups and property owners were holding meetings, preceded by red flares and brass bands, at which demands were voiced for repeal of the water tax increase as well as the 10 per cent tax penalty. A reduction in the interest rate on first mortgages also was demanded.

Mayor LaGuardia and other city officials were warned a tax strike would be called on April 2 unless the demands were met.

An aldermanic investigating committee last Friday brought out that the 859 employes of the unemployment relief bureau had

Relief's Rule By Roosevelt Is Announced

But Indication Is That Hopkins and Tugwell Will Do Spending.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Despite word from official quarters that President Roosevelt himself will take charge of the pending $4,880,000,000 works relief program, indications were clear last night that his two foremost young New Dealists—Harry L. Hopkins and Rexford Guy Tugwell—will have the lion's share in actual expenditure of the money.

Relief Administrator Hopkins, it was learned, is to be named "executive secretary" of the proposed Presidential board which will control allotment of the relief billions. As a member of this board and head of a new $1,000,000,000 rural rehabilitation and land-use program, Dr. Tugwell will have scarcely less importance in administration of the fund.

However, for the second time since the works relief bill began its stormy career in Congress, a report was circulated that Mr. Roosevelt will be the active, working chairman of the works board, that he alone asked for the money and that he alone will be responsible for expending it.

Double Purpose.

The purpose of the emphasis on this point, it is understood, was twofold. In the first place, Administration leaders are anxious to divert criticism from the bill based on reports that one or another of Mr. Roosevelt's "left wing" subordinates will have a predominant part in the program. Secondly, reports that Mr. Hopkins and Dr. Tugwell are in line for advancement over the head of Harold L. Ickes, the PWA administrator, are understood to have aroused him.

The latter lost no time in expressing his feelings when a similar situation arose in the past and it was regarded as significant that yesterday he called on Secretary Stephen T. Early at the White House. Whether his mission concerned this subject was not revealed, but observers were not long in linking his visit with the later report that Mr. Roosevelt would have personal charge of the program.

All hope for immediate action on the works bill was dissipated, meantime, when the conference committee broke up after three hours of debate with an announcement that nothing of importance had been agreed upon. Enough diversity of opinion had developed to persuade most members that a week or more will be required to reconcile differences between the two Houses.

No Major Decision.

The committee made a few changes in technical phrasing, it was said, but no decision was reached on any of the major alterations written into the bill by the Senate, including the controversial Thomas silver amendment. Another meeting will be held today, but no report on progress will be made until a final compromise has been reached, according to Senator Carter Glass, Virginia, chairman of the Senate group.

The Thomas amendment, directing the Treasury to issue silver certificates up to the full legal value of silver, $1.29 an ounce, will be dropped by the committee, thus bringing on a threatened filibuster when the bill reappears in the Senate. Another amendment expected to be dropped or revised is the McCarran measure requiring Senate confirmation of all officials in the works program with salaries of $5,000 or more. This likewise would provoke another controversy on the Senate floor, it is believed.

Although a general silence was observed, it was learned that Republicans on the committee jibed Democrats by proposing that under

Traffic Case Fixing Here Up at Inquiry

Inspector Lamb Told to Supply Full Report to House Group.

Seth Richardson Raps Use of Influence in Thwarting Laws.

A sweeping inquiry into that modern pastime, the "fixing" of traffic cases, was ordered yesterday by the District Crime Investigating Committee of the House, which threatens to reveal the names of those whose "pull" at headquarters makes them invaluable to those "in the know" who may get tickets.

Counsel John R. Fitzpatrick ordered Inspector B. A. Lamb, traffic chief of the Police Department, to furnish him with full information at the resumption of committee hearings.

What Fitzpatrick wants to have Lamb give him are: (1) The number of tickets fixed. (2) Who fixed them. (3) The auto tag numbers of the tickets which were fixed. From this knowledge he hopes to deduce who the "big fixers" of police quarters are.

Mounted Police Urged.

Other enlivening happenings of the day included the agreement between Chairman Randolph and Inspector Lamb that it would be a very nice thing if mounted policemen were brought back into service. They would be very handy, it was agreed, in case of a large crowd or a riot, or even just a parade.

The efficiency rating system was scored roundly by Inspector Lamb, who said that ratings given officers by precinct captains are entirely ignored by the Central Rating Board. Inspector Lamb advocated the board's abolition.

Seth W. Richardson, former Assistant Attorney General, and an authority on parole and probation laws, charged that the recent appointment of Frank R. Jelleff to the District Parole Board was "perfectly ridiculous."

"Jelleff can't do the job," charged Richardson, "unless he gives up his business on F street. It isn't a half-time job. It's a full-time job."

"Pull" Here Criticized.

Washington, "the city of influence," was described by Richardson as the city where pull is continually being used to get friends of politicians out of trouble.

"You have here a very peculiar situation with respect to enforcement of laws against crime," said Richardson. "You have this great institution up here on the Hill, the Capitol. You have Congressmen with a line of influence running all over town. Every single time somebody is pressed or pinched the first thought is 'have you a Senator or Representative who can help you out?'"

A problem that has interested Washingtonians for many years failed of being completely cleared up yesterday when Fitzpatrick asked Lamb why intersections guarded by traffic lights had to have officers assigned to them. Lamb said the presence of street cars and pedestrians made them necessary.

Denies Trolleys Favored.

"It is my personal feeling," said Chairman Randolph, that preference is given the street cars in making the turns. Is there any reason why that should be?"

"I don't know whether I can answer that," said Lamb. "I was a traffic officer for 14 years and it has sort of been handed down that

Berlin, March 27.—Immediate intervention by the powers to prevent Lithuania from executing four Memel Nazis on charges of high treason was demanded tonight by hundreds of thousands of irate Germans in a series of public mass demonstrations from one end of the Reich to the other.

Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler was cheered in one demonstration outside his chancellery by a mob of frenzied men and women shouting: "Down with Lithuania!" He solemnly waved a hand in acknowledgment as he gazed down on the violent scene from a window.

More than 100,000 persons demonstrated in the famous Lustgarten in the heart of Berlin, while thousands sought to storm the Lithuanian legation in the capital. Steel-helmeted police reinforcements held them back.

Germany Seethes.

Speakers denounced Lithuanian rule over Memel, an autonomous territory on the Baltic formerly belonging to Germany, and the death sentences at a mass court-martial in Kaunas yesterday against Nazis charged with fomenting an armed uprising against Lithuania.

The Lustgarten demonstration was but one of a series throughout the Reich. At Koenigsberg, in East Prussia, a crowd of 15,000 held a violent anti-Lithuanian demonstration in the Schlageterhall, demanding intervention. A protest was sent to the guarantor powers—France, Italy, Britain and Japan—demanding protection of the German minorities in the Memel territory. Other huge protest meetings were

Britain Likely To Call Parley And Ask Hitler

Round-Table Conference Would Follow Stresa Session April 11.

By the United Press.

London (Thursday), March 28.—The Daily Mail's diplomatic expert, writing in today's issue, reports that there appeared to be a strong possibility Germany would be invited to another conference of European powers, probably in London, at an early date.

He reported this sentiment arose after the report of Sir John Simon, foreign secretary, to a special cabinet session last night, on his Berlin conversations.

The Daily Mail said Sir John Simon planned to urge inclusion of Germany in a European round-table conference when he attended the three-power parley at Stresa, Italy, on April 11, to discuss German rearmament.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 27.—Sir John Simon came back to London today to tell the British cabinet just what Adolf Hitler wants before he joins any European security system.

The ministers were called into special session to receive the foreign secretary's quick report on the results of his conversations Monday and Tuesday with Germany's strong-willed chancellor.

[A hint that some German rearmament to check France's domination in Europe might not be unwelcome to Britain was given in British quarters in Berlin, according to a copyrighted Associated Press story from that capital. The assertion was that Britain, by indirec-

Baruch in Nye Probe Defends War Record

Calls Neutrality Policy Vital; Backs Plan of Committee.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Proposals for an American neutrality policy gained impetus yesterday as the Nye Munitions Committee resumed its inquiry by hearing Bernard M. Baruch indorse in principle its plan for taking profits out of war and sharply and elaborately defend his own record during the World War.

Mr. Baruch, chairman of the former War Industries Board, told the committee he believed it essential that this country determine a neutrality policy at once in order to avoid being drawn into a foreign conflict. He did not go into details in his prepared statement. The committee will question him today about his proposal, including, presumably, his ideas on neutrality, since that subject is under study by the group.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull at his press conference offered to collaborate in the fullest and most whole-hearted way with the Nye committee or any other congressional group interested in formulating a neutrality policy.

Silent on Conclusions.

Mr. Hull declined to reveal what conclusions the State Department, after studying the neutralfty problem for almost a year, had reached. He explained he preferred to have the department's study completed so that it might be discussed in a comprehensive manner rather than undertake to give piecemeal impressions.

Meanwhile Dr. Raymond Leslie Buell, president of the Foreign Policy Association, an impartial and important organization devoted to the study of foreign affairs and promoting peace, joined in the demand that this Government take immediate action toward a definite neutrality policy.

Believing that the outbreak of a new World War may be closer than "anyone dares to admit," Dr. Buell contended that should Europe be plunged into war the United States would eventually drift into Houses Passes 3 Bills to Strengthen Our Pacific Defenses.

By Douglas Warrenfels.

Stronger fortification of the Pacific Coast, Hawaii and the Canal Zone was voted yesterday by the House.

Perhaps the most important of three naval measures passed was a bill authorizing a $38,000,000 public works program. The other proposals approved will increase flying strength and the number of officers.

The bills, yet to be acted on by the Senate, supplemented the regular Navy Department appropriation measure and formed an integral part of a 1935 national defense program involving an outlay approaching $1,000,000,000.

There was no organized opposition to any of the bills and passage was so certain that only a corporal's guard of members remained on the floor as amendments were considered.

"Waving a War Flag."

Representative Marcantonio (Republican), New York, charged the Administration with "deliberately waving a war flag" on the Pacific Coast. He complained the program is "highly dangerous."

The works bill, championed by Representative Darden (Democrat), Virginia, called for expenditure of $26,000,000 on the West Coast and at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii. The largest single outlay would be $10,000,000 for a drydock at Pearl Harbor. Ammunition depots and submarine bases would be built in the Canal Zone.

Representative Delaney (Democrat), New York, obtained favorable action on his bill to authorize training of 350 to 450 pilots annually at the Pensacola, Fla., flying school.

There are only 806 qualified aviators in the Navy now, Darden said, while a treaty strength Navy—the Administration's present goal—would require 1,910 planes. He explained graduates of the Pensacola school would be asked to serve

Roosevelt Greeted in Bahamas By Duke and Duchess of Kent

British Royal Couple Visit the President on Yacht; Executive Keeps in Touch With Developments Here.

By the Associated Press.

Miami, Fla., March 27.—British royalty, represented by the Duke and Duchess of Kent, called on President Roosevelt today as he visited Bahama waters on his two weeks' vacation cruise in Southern seas.

The Duke of Kent, son of King George and Queen Mary, accompanied by his bride, the former Princess Marina of Greece, visited Mr. Roosevelt aboard the yacht Nourmahal, that came to anchor at Cat Cay in the Bahamas.

On the quarter deck of the palatial yacht of Vincent Astor the royal couple chatted for more than an hour before departing. They were with Sir Bede Clifford, Governor General of the Bahamas, and Lady Clifford, and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Wasey, of New York, owners of Cat Cay.

The bulletin from the Nourmahal read:

"Escorted by U. S. S. Claxton, dropped anchor Cat Cay 10 this morning. Yacht Nourmahal already there. At noon Governor of Bahamas, Sir Bede Clifford, and Lady Clifford, accompanied by their guests, the Duke and Duchess of Kent, and by Mr. and Mrs. Paul Wasey, of New York, who own Cat Cay, called on the President. The Farragut and Nourmahal expect to proceed southward this afternoon. Claxton returning to Miami. Beautiful weather. Smooth sea. "ROOSEVELT, U. S. S. Farragut."

The President, who departed from Jacksonville late yesterday aboard the new destroyer Farragut, transferred to the yacht Nourmahal at Cat Cay. From that vessel he expects to indulge in his favorite sport of deep-sea fishing for the next two weeks.

Meanwhile, in Miami, Harry L. Hopkins, Federal Relief Administrator, kept in close touch with the presidential party as regards the newest developments in the works relief program. Hopkins will remain here for two days more before proceeding northward to Washington.

White House Secretary Marvin H. McIntyre also kept in close touch with the Farragut and Nourmahal, apprising Mr. Roosevelt of the latest Washington developments as well as reports on the condition of senior Secretary Louis McHenry Howe, who has been desperately ill at the White House.

Close friends expect Mr. Roosevelt to absent himself from the Capital until about April 10.

Nice Tried to Influence Vote, Maryland Legislator Charges

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., March 27.—A threat that he would tell "who is behind the scenes controlling the Baltimore delegation," was made by State Senator Harry T. Phoebus (Republican), of Somerset, in addressing the Civitian Club today.

Phoebus said he would make his statement on the floor of the Senate, "where I have immunity," before the end of the current session. He asserted that Maryland can not have a good government because the legislators are "controlled and can not vote as they believe."

"I am a Republican, but I forgot politics when I took my seat in the Legislature," said Phoebus. "Since then I have found that politicians are just the same whether they are Democrats or Republicans.

"If Democrats are worse it is because there are more of them—it is the man, not the party. There isn't any difference between the parties after all. If the Democrats are in, the Republicans try to oust them, and if the Republicans are in, the Democrats find fault."

The Somerset Republican told the Civitan members that Gov. Harry W. Nice tried to influence his vote, but he said the Governor failed on this score.

"Lobbyists, including many Baltimore lawyers who live here for a full 80 days, are among the evils," he said. "A legislator can not walk down a hall without having half a dozen people ask him how he is going to vote on some measure.

"I favor a $1,000 fine for a person asking any Senator or Delegate how he is going to vote on anything. Enforcement of such a law would help bring us good government."

"The real trouble with our Legislature," Phoebus asserted, "is that the Baltimore City crowd is entirely controlled and aren't allowed to use their own minds. Before this session ends I am going to take the floor of the Senate, where I have immunity, and will tell the people just who is behind the scenes controlling the Baltimore delegation in the outrageous manner they are handled."

Cabinet Holds Night Session, Belgian Devaluation Foreseen

By the Associated Press.

Brussels, March 27.—Belgium's new cabinet met tonight to begin drafting a ministerial declaration for Friday's joint session of Parliament, when it will be officially disclosed whether Belgium is headed for inflation of the belga.

Premier Paul Van Zeeland kept his monetary plans in closest secrecy, but the view was widely held that a minimum devaluation of 10 per cent was unavoidable, barring a last-minute miracle, with 15 per cent not unlikely.

It was officially denied that any bank moratorium is contemplated. The cabinet, after wrestling for three hours with financial and other problems, adjourned until tomorrow afternoon.

The frequently government-inspired newspaper Soir expressed the opinion that devaluation already has become a fact without any action by the cabinet. The paper said this belief was borne out by the position of the belga on foreign exchanges. It added that the government's task appeared to be limitation of the decree of devaluation in keeping with the country's economic needs.

The Liberal Party held a caucus and decided to support the new government on the condition that "its program comprises legal maintenance of the currency at its present gold value."

There was criticism in both houses of Parliament because of the absence of official statements as to whether the currency would remain on the gold standard. Premier Van Zeeland said he would resign should a majority of the Catholic, Liberal or Socialist groups fail him in a confidence vote on Friday.

Some frightened Belgians were reported to be importing gold from Holland. This and various other reports caused the heaviest buying of shares on the market in the last few years. A Brussels broker was arrested on charges of having spread word that the government had devalued the currency 25 per cent.

Army Can Not Buy Any Machine Guns

NRA's Removal of Eagle Shuts Off Supply.

The NRA yesterday shut off the Army's supply of machine guns.

The company is the only manufacturer of machine guns in the United States.

The NRA found that the company had violated Section 7(a) of the recovery act by failing to bargain with representatives of its employes. The action was taken on recommendation of the National Labor Relations Board.

Rail Financing Likely to Face Federal Probe

Is Predicted by Wheeler; 'Wholesome' Effect Is Seen by Eastman.

By the Associated Press.

A joint investigation of railroad financing by a Senate committee and the Interstate Commerce Commission was predicted yesterday by Senator Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, after Joseph B. Eastman, transportation coordinator, had asserted such an inquiry would have a "wholesome effect."

Wheeler, chairman of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, which concluded a week of hearings yesterday on his resolution for an investigation of alleged banker control of the carriers, said the inquiry, if ordered, would be deferred until after Congress adjourns.

An inquiry now, he explained, would prevent his committee from pushing Administrtaion-favored measures for consolidating regulation of all transportation agencies, and utility holding company legislation.

Committee to Act Friday.

The Senate committee will meet Friday to act on the Wheeler resolution. Wheeler intends to ask for $25,000 for the inquiry.

Eastman told the committee an investigation of financing and expenditures of the roads would have a "tendency to clear the air."

While such inquires sometimes have the immediate effect of impairing the credit of railroads, he said, there could be no objection to one now "because the railroads have no credit" except what the RFC is giving them.

Question of Dividends.

Wheeler asked if it had not been the practice of some roads to pay dividends without earning them.

"It hasn't been a general practice," the co-ordinator replied. "It did happen in 1930, but why I don't know. The most unsound thing financially about holding companies, the Allegheny Corporation particularly, is that they bought stock equities and issued bonds against them."

Questioned as to the extent of the tie-up between railroad officers and supply companies, Eastman said he did not know, but that J. P. Morgan & Co., and Kuhn, Loeb & Co., about equally divided the financing of the bulk of the carriers and there was a "somewhat similar division in the case of some supply companies."

Man Hurt Seriously As Heavy Barrel Slips

James I. Benjamin, 23, of 1105 Trinidad avenue northeast, was injured seriously yesterday when a 375-pound barrel of shortening he was delivering rolled on him. Benjamin was taken to Washington Sanitarium and Hospital, suffering from leg and internal injuries.

Benjamin, driver of a delivery truck for Swift & Co., of Washington, was rolling the barrel down steps to the basement of the Elektrik-Maid Bakery at Takoma Park, Md., when his foot slipped and the barrel rolled on him. He was given first aid and taken to the hospital by the Takoma Park Volunteer Fire Department.

Work-Relief Leak Stirs Congress; Bankhead Ill But Holds Control; A Comic Opera.

By Raymond Clapper

DEMOCRATIC leaders in Congress went up in the air when news leaked out prematurely that Dr. Rex Tugwell was to have a leading part in administering works relief money for rural rehabilitation and that Harry Hopkins was to be the king pin in the general handling of the works relief program.

One leader said it was poor politics to let this get out and there was considerable backstage commotion.

The upshot was that word was quickly put out at the White House by Stephen T. Early that Mr. Roosevelt himself would be the head man.

The reason leaders are jittery is that they are working against time to get the bill through conference and approved in identical form by both Houses. Every detail about administrative plans that leaks out now starts a new line of protest. It was to ward off such sniping that Mr. Roosevelt exerted utmost pressure to disclose nothing in advance about plans for administering the $4,880,000,000 fund. Now it may be two weeks before Congress turns over the final act to him.

Representative William B. Bankhead, House majority leader, is running the House Democrats by remote control from his sick bed in his Connecticut avenue apartment. He called in the Rules Committee the other day and outlined the strategy to be followed in outmaneuvering silverites on the works bill. His lieutenants visit him almost daily for bedside conferences.

His favorite reading is the Congressional Record. Although gaining weight and feeling better, Bankhead still is uncertain when he can return to the House floor. He has been ill since before he was elected leader.

* * * *

Here's something that Gilbert and Sullivan could have made into a comic opera. It is all in the Congressional Record of yesterday.

Cast of characters:

Senator Ashurst, Arizona Democrat, courtly, generous, anxious to be friendly to everyone, but who can let go a good, sound wallop when he is mad.

Senator McKellar, Tennessee Democrat, author of the famous McKellar rider which knocked the alcohol tax unit's civil service staff into a cocked hat, blusters up like March weather, and accepts no apologies unless they are done up in Christmas wrappings.

Senator Ashurst led off by apologizing to the Senate for having supported the McKellar rider originally. He said he had followed McKellar, who was ignorant of what he was doing.

Later Ashurst attempted to apologize, with, according to the Congressional Record, the following results:

Mr. McKellar: If the Senator wants to apologize, let it stand that way.

Mr. Ashurst: All right. I do apologize——

Mr. McKellar: I will accept it.

Mr. Ashurst: No, Mr. President, wait until I have finished.

Mr. McKellar: If the Senator is going to do that, I am not going to have anything more to say.

Mr. Ashurst: I do apologize. If my language bears any construction that would charge the Senator with any improper conduct or lack of fidelity to the public welfare, I apologize. As to his being ignorant of what he did, I do not apologize.

I am through.

Mr. McKellar: The Senator is so ignorant about everything he deals with that it might well be left just where it is. I will think the question over.

One of the proud boasts in behalf of NRA is that it has abolished child labor. Nevertheless, the idea apparently hasn't sunk in very deeply, because during the last three months 11 State Legislatures have rejected the child labor amendment to the Constitution, and only 4 ratified it. This amendment has been pending 11 years and exactly half of the States have ratified it.

Senator James J. Davis, of Pennsylvania, is ill at Battle Creek, Mich., but apparently not as badly off as some inquiries at his office suggest. He telegraphed his secretary yesterday to arrange that when the Senate votes on the pink slip, he be paired for repeal.

Davis is the only Pennsylvania Republican left in important office. If anything happened to him the Democratic Governor would appoint a Democratic successor, giving Pennsylvania two Democratic Senators for the first time in more than 60 years. Pennsylvania already has the first Democratic Governor since 1888, the first Democratic house in the Legislature since the Civil War, and the first Democratic majority in its congressional delegation in 75 years.

Only yesterday Pennsylvania's political big shots were Republican stalwarts like Penrose, Knox, Pepper, Reed, Mellon and the Vares with Uncle Joe Grundy, lobby ringmaster, horrified over what he calls "backward States" who sent Democrats and insurgent Republicans to Washington.

Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, who has been an amiable Florida Democratic Senator for a quarter of a century, is shocked and pained at having been confused with Henry P. Fletcher, chairman of the Republican national committee.

A press dispatch from Palo Alto, Calif., reported that Herbert Hoover had received congratulations on his recent Republican call to arms from "Chairman Duncan U. Fletcher and scores of other party chieftains and Republican business leaders."

The venerable Senator, rising in the Senate to a point of personal explanation, said that as a result of having been labeled a Republican, he was receiving communications from his Florida constituents threatening various things.

"I have sins enough of my own to answer for without being loaded with those of others," he said.

Republicans looking for a vote-getter in the 1936 presidential race need go no further. Their man is the new Republican mayor-elect of Danbury, Conn., Adam A Roth, who has just led his party back to glory after eight years of Democratic rule. That's all anybody here knows about him, but when a Republican who can be elected turns up anywhere, why quibble over details?

Dust Storm Victims To Wait 2 Months

Unless Rain Comes, Many Families Will Migrate.

By the Associated Press.

Denver, March 27.—Within two months will be written a sad ending or an ending not quite so sad to the new saga of the soil in which eastern Colorado farmers are the drought-harassed characters.

Today the air had cleared in northern Colorado and Wyoming and cooler temperatures appeared with hints of rain and snow. A new storm blew up during the day in southern Colorado and Kansas, however, and a twist of the wind floated the yellow cloud over west Texas and New Mexico, hampering aerial navigation.

Business men and relief officials of Baca County, the area most severely affected in Colorado by dust and drought, said the homesteaders and the dry-land farmers will hold out two months, praying for rain to end a four-year dry spell.

If the rain does not come, the businessmen and relief authorities predict a great migration of families to other farm lands.

Townsend Denies His Hat's in Ring

Not Fitted for Presidency, Pension Advocate Says.

By the Associated Press.

Dr. F. E. Townsend, author of the Townsend old-age pension plan, said yesterday he would not run for President "under any circumstances" as "I am not fitted for it mentally or physically."

He made this assertion in commenting on a statement in Boston on Tuesday by Capt. Charles M. Hawks, his representative, that he planned to lead a third party in 1936 with Senator William E. Borah, Idaho Republican, as his potential running mate for the Vice Presidency.

Under the Townsend plan, everyone in the United States over 60 would receive $200 a month provided it was spent within the next 30 days.

Senator Borah, with only a momentary glance at a newspaper clipping of the Boston statement, said, "No comment."

Then he grinned broadly and walked away.

Bill Restricting Admission of Aliens Opposed.

Representative Caroline O'Day, of New York, praised the work of the women's organizations in the recent New York State campaign, in speaking to the Woman's Democratic Club of Leland, Md., at a meeting Tuesday night in the county building at Bethesda. Mrs. O'Day expressed opposition to the bill restricting the admission of aliens into the United States for the next ten years.

A nominating committee has been named as follows: Mrs. Arthur Metcalfe, chairman; Mrs. Eldridge Wilkins, Mrs. William C. O'Brien and Miss Lulu. The election is to be held in June.

Mrs. P. J. Fisher, Mrs. N. F. Rabner, Mrs. W. A. Knapp, Mrs. Philip Davison and Mrs. Knoppinger were appointed members of a committee to arrange for a card party to be held in April in the Woman's Club of Bethesda. Hostesses for the meeting included Mrs. Katharine Callan, Mrs. Philip Davison, Mrs. Richard Cunningham, Mrs. Oscar Gaither, Mrs. William F. Bixby and Mrs. Bevan Sharpless.

Young Hecklers of Dern Held on Bonds of $1,000

Philadelphia, March 27 (AP).—Two youths, over whose arrests legal action against police was threatened, were held in $1,000 bail each today, accused of heckling Secretary of War Dern in one of the demonstrations that marked his visit here.

One of the youths, Matthias Shallcross, 20, told Magistrate Edward Roberts he represented the "Eastern Pennsylvania Youth Congress," which is "opposed to war." Arrested with him was John Adams, 21.

Business Trend Varies, Report Of Roper Says

A picture of United States business, showing fairly good conditions in some cities and declining trade in others, was presented yesterday by Secretary Roper.

The report was the first of a series of weekly ones on condition compiled from surveys made by department representatives throughout the country. The compilation was the first experiment in an attempt to make a weekly business survey of the country. Twenty-eight cities were represented in the first report.

The survey covered retail and wholesale trade with little emphasis on manufacturing industry. It showed fairly good conditions in the South and some of the East, with business not so brisk on the West Coast and seriously affected by dust storms in parts of the Middle West.

Late Easter Retards Trade.

The lateness of the Easter season was given generally as a reason for slowness in retail trade. Somewhat increased industrial activity was reported in the Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Detroit districts, affected largely by the automobile business.

A summary of reports by cities follows:

New York—Retail sales lower than in corresponding week last year. Revived buying interest in automobiles. Wholesale trade down with textile business affected by break in cotton market. Published earning statements showing better increases than expected help to dispel gloom. Construction industry slow, mostly confined to alterations.

Philadelphia—Retail trade experiences sharp pick-up in some lines, notably clothing, garden tools and machinery. Wholesale markets improved. Factory pay rolls show steady increase since January.

Pick-up Noted in Chicago.

Chicago—Gradual pick-up in Easter trade noted, but no marked increase over previous week. Most satisfactory reports from large mail order houses. February employment figures for Illinois show substantial gain. Good activity in small suburban home building.

Detroit—Retail trade equal to year ago. Wholesale off about 2 per cent. Employment gains. Ford will install new equipment costing $3,000,000 and employ 1,000 additional men in resuming glass manufacture. Production of automobiles slightly more than same week last year.

Cleveland—Retail trade lags. Textile plants operate 40 hours a week instead of 36 to meet spring demand.

Pittsburgh—Retail trade increasing but lagging behind last year, due to late Easter. Pittsburgh ingot steel rate down from 37 per cent to 35 per cent. Scrap price down 25 cents a ton. Mahoning-Shenango steel operations up from 51 per cent to 55 per cent. Wheeling operations down from 85 per cent to 80 per cent.

San Francisco—Department store sales about even with last year. Lumber trade quiet. Rainfalls indicate best agricultural prospects in years. Best tourist year since 1929 expected.

Portland, Oreg.—Recovery progress retarded by slowness in export trade in lumber, grain and flour. Anticipate shut-down of some large mills. Growing conditions and stand of wheat best in five years. Large movement to this district of people from drought areas.

Auto Sales Soar in St. Louis.

St. Louis—Retail trade up 10 to 12 per cent over last year. Wholesale business spotty. No new construction. Automobile sales 3 to 1 over last year.

Kansas City—Retail and wholesale business up over last week, but still slowed by dust storms. Increase of 40 per cent in income tax collections.

Cincinnati — Department store sales 20 per cent over last year. Crops escaped serious dust storm damage. Electric refrigerator manufacturer reports $1,000,000 order.

Buffalo—Clearing house figures show decrease. New car registrations up 205 over same week last year. Twenty-four business leases negotiated during week.

New Orleans—Retail business up 10 per cent over last year in better class stores. Employment applications decreasing.

Atlanta—Retail trade up 5 per cent over previous week, but 15 per cent under last year because of late Easter. Bank clearings show 10 per cent increase over last week.

Pacific 'Edens' Near Reality; Ship Sails to Create Air Bases

Isles Will Become Homes of 118 Men on Newest Frontier of Aviation.

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, March 27.—The steamer North Haven, bearing men and equipment to rear miniature cities on lonely islands destined to become way stations for transpacific planes, sailed today.

Everything from pre-fabricated buildings to buttons and safety pins made up the 6,000-ton cargo. These little cities will be the homes of 118 men—and no women—on aviation's newest frontier.

As the North Haven headed out the Golden Gate, the Pan-American Clipper, destined to become the first plane to make a commercial flight between California and Hawaii, was soaring westward over the Gulf of Mexico from Miami, Fla. It reached Acapulco, on the western coast of Mexico, at 7:20 p. m. (Central standard time), tonight, completing the 1,500-mile hop from Miami in 11 hours, five minutes. It will resume the flight tomorrow.

The big passenger ship is heading for California to inaugurate Pan-American Airways' experimental service to Hawaii, starting probably about April 10.

Every possible household article for the convenience of the Eveless Edens was stored aboard the North Haven, sailing under charter of Pan-American Airways.

Midway Islands, one of the Hawaiian group, 1,323 miles west of Honolulu, and Wake Island, 1,191 miles from Midway, are the destinations of the North Haven.

The supply ship carried four baseball bats. It is planned to provide baseball among other comforts and recreations of civilization for the colonies. Other items aboard were razor blades, tobacco, chewing gum, shoe laces and collar buttons.

Plans on paper for the 24 buildings of the two colonies, airway officials said, take in every detail, right down to a place for the sunburn cream on each bathroom shelf.

Small Bill Procedure Is Changed in House

By the Associated Press.

The House approved yesterday a change in procedure for handling the hundreds of small private bills, which have no national significance, but manage to sway votes back home.

Chairman O'Connor (Democrat), New York, of the Rules Committee said the measure would thwart an individual member who tried to stop action on scores of bills because one of his own failed to pass.

Led by Representative Blanton (Democrat), Texas, opponents contended the change meant imposition of a drastic gag rule on the House.

It will require an objection of at least two members instead of only one as at present to stop consideration immediately of a private bill such as one for the relief of an individual or the building of a small bridge or monument. Omnibus private bills also will be allowed.

Owners Fight Bill to Relieve Lease Liability

Contend That Measure in Maryland Hits at Vested Rights.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., March 27.—The House judiciary committee today heard opponents of a bill to relieve mortagees of leasehold from liability under leases creating ground rents contend that it would detroy the vested rights of ground rent owners.

George Brady, representing ground owners, said the bill was "unfair since mortgagees, whose investments are temporary can protect themselves against ground rent owners who have no protection whatsoever."

Arthur Machen, also opposed to the measure, stated that "all rights of the ground-rent owner are destroyed by this bill."

Thomas E. Barrett, lone proponent, said "it is unjust to hold the mortgagee liable for default of an owner of property over whom he has no control. It is not fair to transform a creditor into a debtor," he finished.

The bill was introduced by Senator George Hofferbert (Democrat), of First Baltimore. The opponents offered an amendment to the committee which would relieve the mortgagee under certain conditions and would give the ground-rent holders a right to eject persons from mortgaged premises for nonpayment of taxes.

Eight new concerns, with $75,000 annual pay rolls, established this week.

Birmingham—Improvement in remodeling and reconditioning business properties. Residential repairs showing increase. Marked increase in spring retail trade.

Louisville—Retail business up 10 per cent over last year. Upward trend in employment. Bank clearings 9 per cent over last year.

Denver—Retail sales continue active. Seven hundred tramway employes receive wage increase. Dust storm destroys winter wheat. Damage will run into millions. Three hundred thousand acres leased in eastern Colorado for oil drilling.

Dallas—Wholesale trade running behind. Dust storms disturb business. Bank clearings increase. Postal receipts 10 per cent higher than last year.

Houston—Retail business retarded by late Easter. Weather satisfactory, with plenty of moisture. Southern Pacific Railroad spending $1,000,000 to modernize rolling stock.

Norfolk—Retail sales slightly ahead of last week but behind last year. Chain grocery sales 15 per cent ahead of last year.

Plan to Revive G. O. P. Hailed By All Factions

Potential Standard Bearers Voice Enthusiasm Over Conference.

By Raymond Clapper.

The movement for a Middle Western Republican conference to revive the party in preparation for the presidential campaign next year drew approving comment from Republicans of all factions here yesterday.

Not a dissenting voice was raised in criticism of the proposal to start activity for 1936 at once.

At the same time the attitude which may dominate the meeting, expected to take place probably in Kansas City in May, became clearer with a statement of principles from William Allen White, who has been suggested as chairman of the committee to draft a statement of policy. It forecast, in effect, a New Deal in the Republican Party.

White, at his Emporia, Kans., home, declared that the party must turn away from "the property-minded leadership which has dominated it most of the time for 20 years" and turn to the humanity of Lincoln. He said that unless the Republican Party acted with courage the country might drift into fascism within two or three years.

Leaders Voice Enthusiasm.

Potential presidential candidates, such as Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan; Representative Wadsworth, of New York, and Senator Dickinson, of Iowa, were enthusiastic in encouraging the organizers of the conference.

One of the organizers, National Committeeman Spangler, of Iowa, said that no "self-seeking" politicians would be invited. He denied that any attempt to shift party leadership to the Middle West was contemplated, a position not exactly coinciding with that inferentially taken by William Allen White and others interested in the meeting. Spangler, it was thought, was anxious to avoid arousing antagonism among Eastern leaders in advance of the conference.

Comment concerning plans for the meeting, which were described in The Post yesterday, included the following:

Spangler Outlines Aims.

Harrison E. Spangler, Republican national committeeman from Iowa and leader in the move to call a May meeting of Midwestern Republicans:

"It should be understood that this meeting will be called only to consider plans for the reorganization of the Republican Party in this section and the return of the party to leadership in the country's affairs. No effort to shift party control to the Midwest has been considered nor has any candidate for the presidency been mentioned. No man known to be considered as a candidate for the presidency will be asked to the meeting. Self-seeking politicians are not to be invited.

"All we seek to do is to agree on plans designed to give this country the kind of government it must have if it is to continue in possession of that greatness which has come to it, largely as a result of the fundamentally sound leadership of the Republican Party.

"Reactionaries and radical demagogues alike will be absent from the meeting, which will not be called until we know that the best interests of the country are to be promoted by it."

Dickinson Supports Plan.

Senator L. J. Dickinson, of Iowa: "I am for it. I am for anything that will revive Republican strength. It is one of the many things that will help revive Republican sentiment and provide the leadership necessary to take us out of what we are going through under this Democratic Administration."

Senator Borah, of Idaho: "I'm not asking for an invitation. I don't know what is back of it, and I wouldn't want to comment."

Senator Nye, of North Dakota: "It is fathered by and sponsored by men whose records have been such as to lend great encouragement to the prospect of a real productive meeting. I hope it will be largely attended."

Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan: "Splendid! I'm in favor of the widest possible free action of Republicans all over in the hope it will culminate in a free national convention of uninstructed delegates thoroughly representative of the whole Republican thought of the Nation. It's to be a 'grass roots' meeting and that's what I like about it. Republican reorganization must come from the bottom instead of the top."

Bacon Appeals to Youth.

Representative Robert Low Bacon, of New York: "It's a very healthy and constructive movement. I think I'll even go out there myself. I hope that out of this will come a greater interest among the younger men and women of the party, and that they will come forward and do their part in shaping future policies."

Representative James W. Wadsworth, of New York: "A fine thing."

Representative Hamilton Fish, jr., of New York: "Anything to help build up a militant party is a fine thing. I'm thoroughly convinced the party must be liberalized, and this is a step in the proper direction."

Representative Charles L. Gifford, of Massachusetts: "I can't disapprove of anything tending to enliven the Republican Party, but I do hope they'll go slow about embracing anything too radical or liberal."

Representative John Taber, of New York: "Anything creating activity within the Republican Party and making people begin to think is a good thing. But I'm inclined to be skeptical about changing policies of the party or becoming too liberal."

Hoover Coming East.

Herbert Hoover is planning a trip East next week primarily to attend a meeting of the directors of the New York Life Insurance Co. It was taken for granted, however, that he would be sought out by some Republicans to discuss party matters, especially in view of his call to arms last week.

While numerous persons are mentioned as possible candidates, the effort of leaders is to keep down talk of individuals at this time. There has been no disposition to encourage talk of nominating Mr. Hoover.

Democrats took all of the Republican discussion quite calmly. Representative Drewry, of Virginia, chairman of the Democratic congressional campaign committee, forecast overwhelming Democratic victory next year, both in the presidential and congressional races.

Reports Good, Says Democrat.

"There is a little trouble here and there," he said, "but on the whole the reports are good. Undoubtedly Mr. Roosevelt will be renominated by the Democrats and reelected. A Democratic-controlled Congress also will be elected. While there will be some turnover in seats, reports indicate that the Democrats will pick up enough in Republican districts to offset the losses."

He professed to be unworried by the threat of Huey Long.

"The American people will never elect Long President," Drewry said. "The Democratic party will never nominate him. I have too much confidence in the common sense of the American people."

Youth Asks for Army Horses—and Gets Them

U.S. War Dept. (Artillery)

Dear Sirs, I am willing to pay you to see if you might have an old team of artillery horses, that are too old to be of any use, that you could give away. You see my Dad has a farm here of 300 acres, with a big mortgage on, and we are farming this with a tractor, and have only one team of old mares, one grey and one black. I am 13 yrs this coming June and my brother Roger will be 11 this spring and us boys would like to help our Dad do some farm work this year. We have about 40 head of cattle and some pigs and sheep.

My Dad says he can not afford to buy any horses so I thought I would try and see if I could get help in some way.

Now we live 13 miles north east of Yankton S.D. and if we could get any horse in eastern S.D. or western Iowa maybe we could get some one to bring them here in a truck.

We will have about 150 acres to plow this spring and will have about 90 acres in small grain.

Hoping to hear from you soon

Yours truly

Here is the letter addressed to the War Department which voiced the answered plea of a 13-year-old South Dakota boy for a team of artillery horses.

Artillery Team En Route for Plowing Duty in South Dakota.

Through the efforts of Maj. Gen. Upton Birnie, chief of Field Artillery, U. S. A., and other officers in his branch, 13-year-old Leroy Johnson and his brother Roger, 11, of Volin, S. Dak., will receive two old artillery horses some time today "to help dad finish the spring plowing."

Reno and Judge, two veteran horses of the Third Artillery, now are on their way to Volin, 13 miles northeast of Yanktown, S. Dak., in a truck provided by the officers. It is expected that late this afternoon the animals will be delivered at the Johnson farm.

On March 1, Leroy wrote to Gen. Birnie asking for "an old team of artillery horses, that are too old to be of any use." The boy explained that "my dad has a farm of 300 acres, with a big mortgage on, and has only one team of old mares, one gray and one black."

Gen. Birnie replied that he would be "mighty happy to give you a pair of artillery horses from those that are too old for further service in the Army" if it were possible. But, he added, Army regulations specified that all such animals had to be sold.

However, Gen. Birnie made arrangements with the Field Artillery Association to buy in "Reno" and "Judge" at the auction conducted yesterday at Fort Sheridan near Chicago. The association is made up of active and former artillery officers who contributed 3 cents each toward the purchase price. Reno and Judge brought $35 each at the sale.

"I believe," Gen. Birnie wrote to Leroy, "that if artillery horses could read letters and could talk, all those that have grown too old for further duty in their country's service would be asking me for the privilege of working for you and Roger. They would be happy to serve you as faithfully as their age and strength permitted in return for the good home and the kindness I know you two would give them.

"I believe that if I were your dad, and had a couple of youngsters like you and Roger to help me, I would feel that somehow and in some way the three of us working together would eventually lift that mortgage.

"May you, and may many, many others like you throughout the length and breadth of our country today, continue to bring help and hope and encouragement to our American dads."

$40,000 Prize Won in Sweeps By Capital Man

Eli Gaffield to Use Part of the Money to Give Parents Trip West.

Tired, but still excited after the biggest day of his life, Eli Wiley Gaffield, who has been out of money and a job for five years, sank into a comfortable chair in his home, 921 E street southeast, last night and said:

"Yes, I know what I'll do with the $40,000."

In one hand he held a telegram, which told the story: "Congratulations. Ticket AK 37883 wins residual cash prize. Value, 8,097 pounds. Irish Hospitals Grand National Sweepstakes." Gaffield was one of six Americans to win such a prize. It means they collect $40,000 no matter what the horses do Friday at Aintree, England.

Beside Wiley rested "Cracker," a black Scottie, who also had an exciting day. Ticket AK 37883 had been written in "Cracker's" name. The $40,000 may be his, but he was tired, and slept while his master talked.

For one thing, Wiley, who is 25 and who attends night school at Columbia Tech, is going to take his parents out to California.

"My folks—my father and mother—have been wanting a change of climate for some time," he said, "and this looks like their chance to get back to California. They were out there once and liked it.

"I don't know, but I believe Dad would like to get out on a farm, if he could."

Wiley's face grew serious. Then he added:

"As for me, I want a job as bad as I ever did. But this may be a break, though. For seven years I've been writing lyrics for songs. And part of the money I get is going to finance a trip to New York, where I'll try to sell them."

A companion, Warner Kennedy, who plays piano in a downtown cafe, has written the music for Wiley's songs. They will both go to New York for a while, the prize winner declared.

Out in the grill of the Shoreham Hotel another sweepstakes winner hadn't time to think what he will do with $3,975, which he was notified is coming to him.

Harrison Snags Tax Boost Plan Of La Follette

Ruling Put Off Till Today After Wide-Publicity Idea Is Defeated.

By Robert C. Albright.

The bogie of new taxes once more was dangled in front of the Senate yesterday, after members voted, 51 to 25, against wide-open publicity for all tax returns.

The tax move was made by Senator Robert M. La Follette, jr. (Progressive), of Wisconsin, in an effort to slow down the drive for repeal of "pink slip" publicity provisions of the present income tax law.

Senator Pat Harrison (Democrat), Mississippi, immediately made a point of order against the tax amendment. A ruling was delayed until today after a storm of controversial debate had developed.

Would Raise Income Tax.

The La Follette amendment would raise the normal income tax rate from 4 to 6 per cent, reduce exemptions to $2,000 for married persons and $800 for single, and raise maximum surtax rates from 59 to 71 per cent. He estimated it would yield $275,000,000 a year.

Earlier, La Follette sponsored the wide-open publicity amendment, which went down to defeat. Regarded as a test of sentiment for repeal of the "pink slip" publicity law, its rejection was believed to presage abandonment of the present "pink slip" system when that issue come to a vote.

Forty-two Democrats and 9 Republicans voted against mandatory publicity yesterday, while 17 Democrats, 7 Republicans and 1 Progressive voted for full publication. This approximates the division expected on the "pink slip" repealer, which already has been approved by the House.

Without controversy, the Senate accepted another amendment by Senator Edward P. Costigan (Democrat), of Colorado, making all Federal tax data available to State and local tax officials and boards of review. It was declared a misdemeanor, however, for them to pass this information along to the public.

A charge of tax avoidance was brought against former Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon by Senator James Couzens (Republican), of Michigan, as he joined with La Follette in his fight to strip tax data of all secrecy.

Point of Order Raised.

Senator Harrison raised his point of order against the La Follette $275,000,000 tax amendment on the ground that revenue legislation should originate in the House. La Follette previously had offered this amendment in the Senate Finance Committee and it was rejected, 14 to 7.

Another revenue proposal by Senator Couzens to raise another $250,000,000 through a graduated tax on excess profits of corporations likewise was rejected in committee, 12 to 5. Word was passed around early this week that neither would be pressed in the Senate.

Leaders in both houses are anxious to avoid a tax row until March 15 tax returns are complete and needs of the Treasury can be gauged properly. At present, they contemplate only extension of $420,000,000 in nuisance levies.

In debate leading up to rejection of the La Follette publicity amendment, Couzens charged former Secretary Mellon was advised of eight methods of tax avoidance. He said hearings before the Board of Tax Appeals in Pittsburgh disclosed that Mr. Mellon "used seven of those ways and means of avoiding taxation."

Long Fights Repeal.

Senator Huey P. Long (Democrat), of Louisiana, speaking from the Republican side of the aisle and declaring he "belonged to all parties," pitched into the debate again, lining up with La Follette and Couzens against "pink-slip" repeal. He said the Democrats have forgotten their campaign speeches and "are now on the side of Wall Street."

Senator William Gibbs McAdoo (Democrat), of California, former Secretary of the Treasury, joined the melee over "pink-slipp" repeal, declaring present publicity methods expose the taxpayer to needless annoyance and "subject him to possible abuse and wrong."

McAdoo said "one of the most efficient collectors in the country" told him his office already was being swamped by salesmen seeking information on citizens' incomes for use in selling. The same man told him collection agencies are being converted into "matrimonial bureaus," besieged by widows looking for eligible widowers with comfortable incomes, and vice versa.

America Ripe for Fascism, Warns William Allen White

Kansas Editor, Mentioned as Leader to Draw Up Platform, Urges Republicans on Course to "Save" Country.

By the Associated Press.

Midwestern Republicans are talking plans for the next presidential campaign. William Allen White, Emporia (Kans.) editor and author, has been mentioned as a possible leader in drafting a platform. In the following article Mr. White gives his views on this and other phases of current party developments.

Emporia, Kans., March 27.—I read the story in which Gov. Alf Landon of Kansas declares that a meeting will be called soon of the representative Republicans in half a dozen or more Midwestern States to put out a new declaration of Republican principles to fit the new order and make new issues for a new day.

This seems to be on the face of it a good idea. But I only know what I have seen in the papers. I have heard such a convention discussed casually at various times by various Republicans. I was not aware that the plans were in any way formulated and have given no serious thought to the details of such a platform.

However, I fear that America may drift into Fascism in the next two or three years unless we Republicans act with real courage and wisdom. The Republican Party must meet the challenge to our ancient democratic liberties, not by denouncing the shortcomings of this Administration, but by guaranteeing the common man something specific in the unmistakable terms of a covenant.

It should include economic security, which means insurance against the uncertainties of ill health, the degradation of unemployment and poverty in old age. The fear of these insurable calamities has pushed Europe over the brink from an imperfect democracy into a rule of dictators, Stalin, Mussolini, Hitler and the Balkan rulers. The slow inexorable forces of the depression in America will persuade those who fear hunger, sikness, idleness and a degraded old age to follow the futile leadership of some radical demagogue who will push us as Europe has been pushed into tyranny. This demagogue will betray us to a ruthless plutocracy backed by the caste consciousness of the military as demagogues have done all over Europe.

If parliamentary government in America keeps weakly monkey-doodling with makeshift measures and denying security to the common man eager to work, danger lurks ahead. The precious liberties for which our fathers have fought for 300 years will be swapped for the fake security of tyrants who will then add the arrogance of their power to cold, hunger and penury.

If the Republican Party has the courage to turn to the humanity of Lincoln and away from the property-minded leadership which has dominated it most of the time for 20 years, we can save America. But America can not be saved by merely denouncing the faults of Roosevelt.

We must make an iron-clad covenant with the people to do certain definite possible things which will relieve the pressure of want and the fear of approaching poverty. But, as I say, what I read in the papers about the coming Republican meeting is all I know definitely about it.

Victorious Candidate Asks New Election

Little Rock, Ark., March 27 (AP).—Wade H. Kitchens, Magnolia attorney who in a contest case was declared the Democratic nominee for Seventh District Representative, today filed a petition asking Gov. Futrell to call an election to determine whether he or Representative Tillman B. Parks should serve that district.

Parks was reelected in last November's general election, but subsequently Circuit Judge Patrick Henry declared Kitchens had won the primary nomination and declared the office vacant. Judge Henry held there had been fraudulent voting in the Parks-Kitchens race in primary, and awarded Kitchens a decree giving him the nomination by a few hundred votes.

Mexican Official Denies Cristeros Exist, Charges Effort to Keep Tourists Out of Land

A vista of the new highway entering Mexico by way of Laredo, Tex. It will be open the full distance to Mexico City this year, according to officials.

Says Attempt of Group at Uprising Would Fail Speedily.

This is the seventh and last of a series of articles in reply to a series written for The Post by Frederick Vincent Williams. The Williams articles gave a Catholic viewpoint of conditions in Mexico. The article below and others in the present series reflect the official Mexican viewpoint. Where expressions appear in blacker type, the emphasis was indicated by the author. Dr. Quintanilla has been in the employ of the Mexican government for 15 years.

By Luis Quintanilla,
Of the Mexican Foreign Service.

History helps us to understand the truth of the past. Traveling leads the people to the truth of the present. Mr. Williams evidently fears both.

I have pointed out in all previous articles the systematic contempt shown by this hierarchy propagandist toward historical facts.

The fear of tourist travel is evident throughout the seven articles which I have read. In every one of them I have found a warning—based on Mr. Williams' "material"—to keep the tourist away from Mexico. The author practically says, "Don't dare to go to Mexico. If you cross the Rio Grande the 'Cristeros' will blow up the train . . . You see if they don't!" "Mexico City bristles with bayonets." "Soldiers are everywhere." "In the very heart of Mexico City," writes Mr. Williams, "the 'Cristeros' after seven years are meeting to plan the overthrow of the anti-Christian government." "There are 40,000 of these 'Cristeros' in Mexico City, formed into companies and regiments." "The 'Cristeros' plan to crack down on the rails leading into Mexico City . . ." "Major offensive will begin against Chihuahua, Torreon, Monterrey." "The news will drift across the border soon. It will come at first in bits and dribbles . . . Then, they will flash into the headlines, battles at Chihuahua, Torreon and Monterrey. Then, on the border, will appear the new revolutionaries, the 'Cristeros'." Mr. Williams brings to an end his last article with that prophetical apotheosis of the "Cristero's" Holy Legions.

Yet, contrary to the hierarchy's desire, I must say, there is not the slighest possibility of a "Cristero" triumph in Mexico. Everyone south of the Rio Grande is aware that there is no "Cristero" organization now and that if organized "Cristero" movement should be attempted, it would be crushed immediately, as it was in 1926, when the hierarchy instigated these outlaws to sack villages and to blow up trains.

Moreover, all Mexicans know that there can not be a "Cristero" organization. The word "Cristero" itself is always used in a derogatory sense. Mr. Williams evidently ignores that Mexican Catholics deeply resent being called "Cristeros"

The first "Cristeros" or "Religioneros" thus called rightly by the people, instead of "Cristianos" or "Religiosos" made their appearance at the time when the reform laws were being enforced, toward the middle of the XIX century. In its fight against 1857 liberalism, to which I have referred in a previous article, the hierarchy began to instigate Indians against the authorities.

Villages Sacked By Isolated Bands.

At that time, as later on in 1926, the "Cristero" movement failed from its inception. But isolated bands of fanatics began to sack villages in the remote parts of the country, committing all sorts of individual marauding, as it is recorded in Mexican history.

These marauders were told that there was a "Holy War" against the enemies of religion. In many cases, they were told to rise against Protestants.

The Mayor of Angangueo was savagely murdered by fanatical Indians, because he had sworn to abide by the reform laws. He was smeared with pitch and set on fire "while the 'Cristeros' danced merrily around the burning victim." I take this and the following instances from the well-known book by Dr. Alfonso Toro, a distinguished Mexican historian, on "La Iglesia y el Estado en Mexico," published in 1927.

The Mayor of Temascaltepec and the collector of internal revenue of Tejupilco were also murdered by the revolting Indians whose cry was then "Long Live Religion," "Death to Protestants."

"The clergy"—writes Dr. Toro—"has lately tried to deny its intervention in these fanatical uprisings of 'Cristeros' or 'Religioneros;' but the facts collected do not leave a doubt regarding the leadership of the clergy."

Father Giles, after celebrating mass in the little hamlet of Cuentla, gathered the Indians and told them "that the authorities of Temascaltepec were Protestants . . . and that if they wanted to go to heaven, it was necessary for them to kill the Protestants."

In Ahualulco, in the early morning of March 2, 1875, a band of more than 200 "Cristeros" forced their way into the house of a Protestant minister, C. J. L. Stephen, and murdered him, together with Jose Isaias, who lived in the house.

During the last uprising of 1928, the "Cristeros" were true to their tradition. They executed a labor leader, Rafael Delgado.

In Colima, which was the region of the greatest rebel strength, "they systematically burned government and state village and rural schools," writes Ernest Gruening in his important work on Mexico to which I referred previously.

I have before me a list with dates, names, etc., of all the "Cristero" exploits during the 1926-28 uprising. I have no space to give the readers of The Post a transcription of this record. I cannot refrain, however, from mentioning here one of the crimes which alone would suffice to make the "Cristeros" famous in the annals of crime: The attack on the Guadalajara-Mexico train on April 20, 1927.

Train Attacked By 400 Men.

The train was attacked by 400 men shouting the battle-cry of "Long live Christ the King." Those men were headed by three priests, Vega, Pedraza and Angulo. The Episcopate itself was unable to deny the participation of the priests. The entire train guard and passengers, including women and children, 54 in all, were killed. "A number of the wounded passengers were burned alive when the attackers poured kerosene on the cars and set fire to them. One man, traveling with his mother, wife and three children, lost them all—and his reason. When dawn broke on the charred wreckage he was wandering around, gibbering with a burned baby's corpse in his arms. All this, in the name of Christ the King!" writes Mr. Gruening.

Mr. Williams, so fond of anonymous atrocity stories, should have mentioned to his readers, at least, this dreadful episode, which is not fiction, but a fact actually recorded in "Mexico's History." Instead, he writes that their voices lifted in the song of "Viva Cristo Rey" (the "Cristero's" war cry) are "beautiful" and that there is in them "the soft liquid quality of the far South."

Mr. Williams is acting as a sort of ambassador in the United States for these Mexican outlaws. In his desire to frighten tourists, he even announces the date of the "Cristero" uprising. It is going to be—this spring. Mr. Williams says it throughout his articles. It is settled. Mr. Williams says so!

"Railroad bridges and railroads are being blown up." Mr. Williams makes these utterly false statements without even mentioning concrete instances.

"The trains I rode down were wobbly on their rails. The Pullmans leaned and listed heavily. The trains proceeded at a snail's pace over bridges hastily repaired, after being shattered by bombs. Trains ahead of us were 15 and 20 hours late. At night, the lights in the cars were dimmed, the shades pulled tight to their sills." Where are the bridges and the railroads which Mr. Williams' powerful imagination has been blowing up?

I am no attorney for the Pullman Co., nor for the railroads of Mexico, but I know that the 25,000 American tourists who have traveled to Mexico City in 1934, will undoubtedly back my statement that Mr. Williams' attack on the Mexican railroads is entirely unjustified. Railroads and Pullman cars in Mexico are the same as those used in the United States. They are generally praised by all.

The contention that "at night the lights in the cars were dimmed and the shades pulled tight to their sills" could be taken as a good example of all this foolish propaganda. In all Pullman cars all over the world, the lights are dimmed at night to give passengers comfort in their sleep. The Mexican Pullman porter, the same as his American colleague, pulls the shades down to allow passengers to undress in privacy. Everybody knows that, except the writer of these whimsical tales.

Travel Boycott Declared Aim.

Of course, in Mexico as in the United States, or anywhere else, Mr. Williams would have undressed with the shades up, had he wished to do so; which, of course, I doubt.

Why, then, all these constant "warnings?" Why such silly remarks as the Pullman shades pulled down at night? The answer seems to me quite clear. Hierarchy propagandists are striving to enforce a boycott on Mexican traveling in order to prevent American citizens from seeing, with their own eyes, the unsoundness of their propaganda.

The attacks of Mr. Williams on Mexican traveling are so absurd that he even accuses the managers and clerks of Mexico's hotels of being government agents.

"From the time the foreigner arrives in Mexico until he leaves, he is constantly under the influence of the Mexican government," dares to write Mr. Williams. Everyone of the 25,000 Amercian citizens who have been touring through Mexico lately knows that this awkward statement is absolutely false. Tourists can go around in Mexico just the same as in their own home towns.

Even taxi drivers are being accused by Mr. Williams of being spies! "The taxi drivers"—he writes—"are part of the Soviet or Socialist Union and appear loyal to the government. They are good propagandists; but beware how you speak of the government yourself in the presence of these fellows." I know that the taxi drivers of Mexico, just as the hotel managers and clerks or the Pullman and railroad conductors will have a good laugh when they read such silly tales.

The truth is that the number of tourists coming from the United States into Mexico is constantly increasing. A wire from the Associated Press, dated February 28, 1935, tells us that, according to the executives of the Pacific Missouri Railroad, the number of American tourists pouring into Mexico had increased 100 per cent up to that date. Last year, not less than 151 excursions from the United States visited Mexico.

I could fill pages and pages with statements of prominent American citizens praising their trip to Mexico and the charms of that land of sunshine and romance.

Let me give you only two recent opinions given, one, by Mr. Clarence S. Matson, manager of foreign commerce and shipping, Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, on March 14, 1935, and the other by Mr. Henry Hill, secretary general and manager of the Congress of the International Lions Club, transmitted in a wire by the Associated Press.

Says Mr. Matson: "The transformation of Mexico . . . has been little less than marvelous. Right here, at our own doors, there has been enacted in these recent years a remarkable social transformation . . . Today, Mexico is better off than it has ever been in its history and it is steadily improving."

Mr. Henry Hill declared to the Associated Press, after his return to Chicago from Mexico, only a few days ago, that probably 7,000 American delegates will meet in Mexico City this summer. Mr. Hill added that he was in Mexico during five weeks and had been there last summer for nine weeks. During all that time he had traveled over 7,000 miles throughout Mexico.

"I visited many of the beautiful churches in Mexico. I saw people going in, probably to attend services. And I know that I was never molested in any way when entering the churches."

I hope that the 7,000 American delegates referred to above, together with the 30-odd thousand more tourists that will visit in 1935 that "City of Palaces," of which Mr. Williams himself says that it is "a Paris set in the loveliest garden in America," will bring back to their homes a message of good will and international friendship from the Mexican people, now striving to build south of the Rio Grande a democracy free from all material and spiritual bondage.

U. S. Court Enjoins AAA Milk Licensing

Report Davis, Sick, Will Quit Senate, Denied

Pennsylvanian, at Battle Creek, 'Feeling Fine,' Secretary Says.

Rumors that Senator James J. Davis (Republican), of Pennsylvania, is so seriously ill that he is preparing to resign from the Senate were denied yesterday by the Senator's secretary.

A telegram was received yesterday from Mrs. Davis stating that "Senator Davis is feeling fine today," the secretary said.

Senator Davis has been at Battle Creek, Mich., for some three weeks undergoing a clinical examination and treatment. He is said to be suffering from high blood pressure and general exhaustion.

Rumors current on Capitol Hill have reached the stage where a possible successor to Senator Davis has been mentioned. He is reported to be Matthew H. McCloskey, jr., a wealthy contractor and former Republican who is now supporting President Roosevelt and the New Deal in Pennsylvania and nationally. He is a resident of Philadelphia and said to be an intimate friend of Gov. Earle.

Members of the Democratic delegation from Pennsylvania also have heard rumors regarding the seriousness of Senator Davis' illness.

Senator Joseph F. Guffey (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, was in Harrisburg yesterday, but his office aids discounted the talk regarding his colleague.

U. S. Indicts 34 In War to Rout Illicit Liquor

Ring Far Exceeding Any of Dry Era Smashed Here, Says Prosecutor.

In an effort to smash widespread bootlegging in the District, a special grand jury yesterday returned indictments against 34 persons whom it charged with being part of a ring which has defrauded the Government of nearly half a million dollars in liquor taxes in the last year.

Acting after an investigation which lasted for several months, the grand jury returned four indictments against leaders of the "ring," declaring they were responsible for the smuggling of thousands of gallons of cheap liquor into District stores.

A woman was included in the list of alleged conspirators. One of those named is Samuel S. ("Monty") Montgomery, whose name has figured prominently in the special crime committee's investigation of the Police Department and underworld.

Operations of this group were far more extensive than anything unearthed during the reign of prohibition, it was declared by Assistant United States Attorney Henry Schweinhaut, who presented the Government's case to the grand jury.

From Washington the activities of the alleged ring extended into New Jersey, Maryland and Virginia. Key men of the ring were said to be residents of those States.

Montgomery allegedly headed the local organization. Other "tops" were said to be Arthur Bartolozzi, of Trenton, N. J.; Basil E. Johnson, of Ellicott City, Md., and John Phillips, of Petersburg, Va., all of whom were named in the indictments.

Schweinhaut said bench warrants for their arrest would be sought immediately and that he hoped the cases might be brought to trial without delay.

Had Fleet of 30 Autos.

He declared his evidence showed that the ring maintained a fleet of more than 30 automobiles, which brought a flood of cheap liquor to ten warehouses in the District. From these warehouses, he said, two central distributing "agencies" were kept supplied with potent "corn."

Washington residents who were indicted are:

Samuel Sloan Montgomery, Albert H. Smith, Joseph Samuel Bond, Earl G. Funk, John Manoi, George F. Tear, Belford E. Longnecker, Leonard Smith, Lawrence J. Swann, Wendell Smith, Charles E. Hawkins, Clarence Eugene Ross, Andrew Jackson, Cornelius Carter, Charles Richardson, William Theodore Gilmap, Robert Jones, Henry Landry, John Thomas, Frank Guy, Carroll Thomas, Blanche Thomas, Corlis Sims, Harold Johnson, Julia Beck, Elton Dorsey, Frank Calvin Smith, Frank Newton, Henry Cornelius, Raymond Hawkins and Gorman Wright.

According to the indictments, the liquor handled came from New Jersey, Virginia and Maryland, and consisted of indifferent grades of alcohol, distilled by the usual moonshiner's methods. None of it was poison, and none of it was good.

Kept Offices on P Street.

The so-called ring maintained two offices in the 1400 block P street, according to Schweinhaut, where the retail business was carried on. In addition, he said, places were maintained in the 1400 block Church street northwest, the 1300 block Sixth street northwest, the first block Allen's court southwest, the 1300 block Sixth street northwest, the first block Pierce street northwest, the 1900 block M street northwest, the 200 block Seventh street northwest, the 2000 block Sherman avenue, near Fourteenth and P streets northwest, and in Beantown, Md.

From these stores an average of 500 gallons a day, it is alleged, were dispensed to legitimate liquor dealers and to "hip pocket" dispensers, who plied their wares around the meaner sections of the city. The liquor consisted of "alky," the best grade; "high moon" and green "country," according to Schweinhaut.

Five of the six investigators of the Alcohol Tax Unit, who worked on the cases, Schweinhaut said, were victims of the McKellar rider who worked at their jobs despite the fact they had been removed from the pay roll. They were K. O. Speiss, F. J. Sweeney, W. G. Harding, C. A. Harding and W. P. Fauce.

The indictments set forth two instances in which money was allegedly sent to Bartolozzi, the New Jersey defendant, in payment for liquor. One payment was $1,006 and the other $351, it is alleged. Bartolozzi is said to have cashed a Western Union money order for more than $1,000 sent him in payment for a shipment.

Belford E. Longnecker, one of those indicted, is alleged to have obtained a set of Maryland tags in the name of Ralph Jordan last summer for Montgomery.

Results, to be announced in The Post on Sunday, will eliminate or promote them in the race for scholarship awards at Washington universities. Here are four Virginia girls in the current event.

Group in Chicago Combats Gunmen

Merchants Offer Reward for Courtney Attackers.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 27.—Aroused by gangland's challenge, the business men of the Nation's second city today put a price on the heads of the two gunmen who attempted to slay State's Attorney Thomas J. Courtney.

Sharing the indigation of Mayor Kelly and Gov. Henry Horner, the Chicago Association of Commerce offered $5,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the outlaws who fired eight shots at the prosecutor early Sunday.

The Chicago Crime Commission and the employers and citizens' associations joined the commerce association in signing a manifesto calling for "vigorous action" to meet gangdom's "challenge to the law-abiding people."

Courtney rode unscathed through the hail of slugs and, in cooperation with the police department, pushed a relentless drive today to capture his assailants. The attack marked the first time the underworld had dared attempt to assault a State's attorney here.

Smith, relatives said, suffered a sunstroke in June, 1934, and had been subjected to fainting spells since. He fractured his hip in the fall and complications developed. Physicians said he died of pneumonia.

Sardo Gave Ex-Wife Estate In Will Scrawled on Plane

A will, scrawled in pencil while on an airplane flight, was introduced in court yesterday to attest mutely the love of Albert J. Sardo, prominent District undertaker, for his estranged wife.

Sardo, it was learned yesterday, scrawled a note leaving his entire estate to his "dear wife" on the other side of the letter she wrote him, telling of her plans to go to Reno, Nev., in quest of a divorce.

The will was written as the big plane bearing Sardo buzzed through the skies between Washington and Pittsburgh. It is not valid in the District because it was not witnessed by the requisite number of persons.

Sardo, who was killed in an automobile accident in Virginia, some weeks ago, left two other documents by which he sought to dispose of his property.

One was a half-composed will that bore no signature, and the other was a will dated 1933, in which he wrote that he left everything to his former wife, now Mrs. Helen Villapiano, the wife of an Asbury Park physician.

When Mrs. Sardo obtained her Reno decree, she remarried. The first intimation her husband had of her intention to divorce him was in the latter on which he scrawled his will.

Sardo is survived by an 8-year-old son, who now is the object of a court battle. The former Mrs. Sardo and the undertaker's father and two brothers are seeking custody of the child.

The wills were filed yesterday by the law firm of Whiteford, Marshall & Hart.

Florida Judge Sentences One In Jewel Theft

Another Freed; $246,000 Case Called 'Peculiar,' by the Court.

By the Associated Press.

Miami, Fla., March 27.—Characterizing the case as "peculiar," Judge Ben C. Willard today closed court records in a recent $246,000 jewel robbery here by freeing one suspect and sentencing another to prison.

Upon his plea of guilty, Charles Cali, of New York, was sentenced to eight years' imprisonment for alleged participation in the robbery of Mrs. Margaret H. Bell, also of New York, in her Miami-Biltmore Hotel suite January 26.

Similar charges against Nicholas Montone, alleged companion of Cali, were quashed.

"This seems a peculiar case to the court," said Judge Willard, when informed of the details of the robbery.

"If it weren't for the insurance question, I don't believe it would ever have come up," said the judge.

The robbery occurred after Mrs. Bell returned to her hotel suite from the race track, where she wore the jewels.

She and her companion, Harry Content, New York broker, were bound by two robbers, who took the jewels and fled from the hotel before an alarm was sounded. Content reported he was robbed of $200 and a watch.

The jewelry was returned under mysterious circumstances. Last week Detective Chief Eugene Bryant, of Miami Beach, and another detective, found the valuables in their automobile when they returned to it after answering a telephone call to a hotel. How they got there police do not know.

U. S. Loses Point In Mellon Inquiry

Union Trust Quiz to Attack Witness Blocked.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, March 27.—The Tax Appeals Board today halted efforts of the Government to dig into records of the $300,000,000 Union Trust Co. in an attack on the credibility of a witness in the A. W. Mellon income tax case.

Presiding Member Ernest Van Fossan sustained an objection raised by Frank J. Hogan, chief Mellon counsel, against questions asked Carl R. Korb, vice president of the institution, regarding sales of securities by some customers and officials of the bank.

Van Fossan said:

"To permit the proposed inquiry would lead us too far afield, and, rather than assisting in the search for the facts in the case at bar, would tend to divert attention from the issues before us."

Korb returned to the stand late today after testimony was completed in the complicated McClintic-Marshall Corporation deal in which part of its $65,000,000 assets were taken over by a holding concern, the Union Construction Co., and the remainder was acquired by Bethlehem Steel.

Japan to Cling To Manchukuo, Mandate Isles

Talks of Force if Needed to Hold Pacific Group Seized in War.

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo, March 27.—Japan gave up her membership in the League of Nations today, but made it clear that she has not the slightest intention of slackening her grasp on either her mandated islands in the equatorial Pacific, which the league bestowed upon her, or on Manchuria, which the league tried to take away.

It was her seizure of Manchuria that caused the disagreement with the league which led to Japan's notice of secession two years ago.

Japanese nationalists say Japan might have to take her stand, by force of arms if necessary, against league members or other states that might want to terminate her possession of the mandates on the ground Japan's title lapsed with her departure from the league.

The highest Japanese authorities, including Premier Heisuka Okada, and especially the admirals who strongly influence imperial policy, have declared Japan's inflexible decision to keep the islands as permanent units of the Japanese Empire.

To Report Annually.

The Japanese government has announced its willingness, however, to consider itself still obliged to render yearly reports to the league's mandates commission. The Japanese hold that these islands, captured from Germany by the Japanese navy early in the World War, actually are held by Japan in full sovereignty, since they were assigned to her by the allied supreme council in fulfillment of pledges given by her allies in the dark middle years of the war. The mandates, the Japanese maintain, were only a convenient dodge to please President Wilson and enable him to square with actualities his "no annexations" in the 14 points.

These islands, the Carolines, Marshalls and Ladrones, scattered over 40 degrees of longitude and 20 degrees of latitude just north of the Equator, possess incalculable strategic value in any struggle for naval mastery of the Pacific. The admirals have declared them to be Japan's "life line" in the Pacific Ocean—just as Manchuria is the army's "life line" on the Asiatic continent.

No Outside Claim.

Thus far, however, no power has shown any intention of disputing Japan's title, and the "crisis" of which the admirals talked forebodingly—while asking larger naval appropriations—promises to pass without recourse to battleships and cruisers.

Toward Manchuria, the other territory figuring so largely in Japan's separation from the league, the official Tokyo attitude is somewhat different. The Japanese deny possession or sovereignty in Manchuria. For purpose of imperial policy it is more convenient to insist that Manchukuo, Japan's creation in the provinces wrested from China, is an independent empire.

The foreign office has declared that although Japan ceases today to sustain any of the obligations or enjoy any of the rights of a league member, she will continue to cooperate with many of the subsidiary peace movements associated with the league, but governed by international agreements outside the league covenant.

She will still adhere to the permanent court of international justice at The Hague.

Transpacific Hop Due Next Month

Mail to Be Carried on Trip About April 10.

The first experimental flight between California and Hawaii, a step toward establishment of a transpacific air line will be made about April 10 by Pan-American Airways, it was announced at the Postoffice Department yesterday.

The statement was made in a notice sent to collectors of air mail covers. Arrangements are being made to carry first-flight letters on the pioneer hop.

While postal officials will sanction the transportation of the mail, it will not be an official flight. Covers sent by collectors to San Francisco will be postmarked there, carried to Hawaii and returned to the sender in the United States.

The company will carry mail in both directions, charging $1 plus airmail postage for a letter one way and $2 for the round trip. Mail for the trip must reach the company at San Francisco not later than 5 p. m., April 8.

JOHN BUCHAN,

Lithuania Acts To Stamp Out Any Disorders

Cancels All Police Leaves; Imposes Oath to Uphold the Constitution.

By the Associated Press.

Kaunas, Lithuania, March 27.—Lithuania moved forcefully today to forestall any disorders in Memel, former German possession, after yesterday's military court verdict sentencing four Germans to death.

The sentences, imposed for murder alleged to have been committed in the course of an asserted Nazi plot to snatch Memel from Lithuania, stirred wide-spread resentment both in the district's German population and in Germany itself.

Fearing demonstrations, the Lithuanian war office today canceled all police leaves in Memel itself and ordered back to duty all Lithuanian border police on leave.

The entire district police force in Memel was required to take an oath to uphold the Lithuanian constitution. Heretofore the oath has been given on the Memel statute under which the League of Nations guaranteed it some measure of autonomy.

As tenseness increased among German residents, who expressed the belief that giving the oath on the Lithuanian constitution violated the Memel statute, the war office forbade all meetings, ordered restaurants to close at midnight and denied all appeals for later hours.

The entire nation, with its population of 2,500,000, was described as ready for any eventuality.

The belief was widely expressed that Germany would bring diplomatic pressure to bear in behalf of the 4 Nazis sentenced to be shot and 87 others given lesser terms in connection with the alleged conspiracy to seize Memel for Germany.

In any event it was expected that the four death sentences would be commuted to life imprisonment.

King Appoints Scottish Author To Rule Canada

John Buchan, New Governor General, First Commoner Named to Post.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 27.—John Buchan, Scottish author and parliamentarian, was named in an appointment signed by King George today as the next Governor General of Canada.

"I am extremely proud to have been chosen as his majesty's representative in Canada," said Buchan in his first statement, "and not less proud to be given a chance of serving Canada."

When the appointment was signed Buchan automatically ceased to be a member of the House of Commons. Few of the members of the House, where Buchan has sat as Conservative member for the Scottish University since 1927, were aware of the significance of the quiet little scene that was enacted as the Commons opened.

After shaking hands with friends who congratulated him on his appointment, including Prime Minister MacDonald, Buchan bowed to the speaker and walked out of the House for the last time.

It is taken for granted that Buchan, the first "commoner" to be appointed his majesty's representative in the Dominion, will be elevated to the peerage, in which case he may return to the House of Lords.

The appointment, which had been widely forecast yesterday, evoked expressions of approval from all sides.

Reich's Intent Topic as Japan Leaves League

Geneva Wonders if Hitler Will Withdraw Notice to Expire in Fall.

By the Associated Press.

Geneva, March 27.—Japan's resignation from the League of Nations became effective at midnight tonight, her rupture with Geneva over the military conquest of Manchuria and the establishment of Manchukuo never having been healed.

According to Japanese reckoning, Tokyo's preliminary notice of withdrawal from the league expired at the midnight hour after an intervening period of two years.

Geneva diplomats were wondering whether Germany will follow in Japan's footsteps and allow her preliminary notice to become effective when it expires in October. It was generally conceded here that if Europe accepts the Reich's political program she may withdraw her notice, but otherwise not.

Russian Support Gained.

The loss of two great nations from the league weakens the body, but it is partially compensated for by the enthusiastic adherence of Russia.

The Chinese Minister to Switzerland, Dr. Hoo Chi-Tsai, called the league's attention today to the fact that the league covenant prohibits any members from withdrawing unless its obligations under the covenant are fulfilled, intimating that in Japan's case this provision was not being observed, since Japan has refused to accept the league's recommendations concerning her military activities in Manchuria.

Queries Meaning.

The Chinese envoy referred to a statement by J. A. C. Avenol, secretary-general of the league, that Japan no longer has any right or obligation toward the league. He said this might be taken to mean that "any member could violate the covenant and then resign, absolved of all obligations."

It was stated that Avenol answered Dr. Hoo privately, explaining that his references to obligations alluded to future Japanese relations with the league rather than her past ones.

Witness for France Collapses, Aids Woman Accused as Spy

Counsel for Mme. Stahl Gains Surprise Retraction on Espionage 'Vow.'

By the Associated Press.

Paris, March 27.—A prosecution witness, hysterical on the stand, helped Mme. Lydia Stahl today in her effort to resist espionage charges being heard by a secret court against her and a score of others, including Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gordon Switz, Americans.

Mme. Stahl, an almond-eyed Russian woman of 43, emerged from the courtroom with eyes glowing and face radiant.

She thanked her lawyer for gaining a surprise retraction from a weeping witness, Mme. Kaminka. The latter collapsed in a fit of sobbing shortly after testifying that Mme. Stahl, an ardent Communist, went to New York to study political science with the intention of aiding the cause.

The collapse came as the court asked Mme. Kaminka to confirm previous testimony before an investigating magistrate in which she quoted Mme. Stahl as saying the death of her son was "a sign I must devote myself to espionage."

"Tell the truth, tell the truth," cried Mme. Stahl, who had been a friend of the witness for 25 years.

"I misunderstood," the witness sobbed. "What she told me was 'it was a sign I must devote myself to the cause.'"

Mme. Stahl, who was said to have exerted an influence over Louis Pierre Martin, French translator in the navy ministry, smilingly denied the charges that she was the "brains" of the spies allegedly working for Soviet Russia. She denied she attempted to get secrets from Martin, or that she bought photographic equipment.

Detectives said they had reason to believe that she photographed naval plans; shopkeepers testified they had sold her cameras.

The defense indicated it would contend Mme. Stahl was innocent of any connection with other spy suspects.

25,000,000 World Jobless.

Geneva, March 27 (AP).—The International Labor Organization today announced that between 6,000,000 and 7,000,000 persons under 25 years of age were unemployed throughout the world. The organization said the world's total unemployed was approximately 25,000,000.

Matrons and debutantes, 18 of them from the United States, will curtsy before King George and Queen Mary at Buckingham Palace in this prelude to the festivities of the King's twenty-fifth anniversary as England's ruler.

Poland Will Buy 2 New Destroyers

British Firm BuildingShips to Strengthen Navy.

By the Associated Press.

Warsaw, March 27.—Poland today placed orders for two destroyers with a British shipbuilding company.

The two new destroyers are to complement the nucleus of the Polish navy—one former German cruiser and several German torpedo boats given her after the peace conference ending the World War. Two destroyers and three torpedo boats recently were built for Poland in France.

The new destroyers ordered in England will be of 2,000 tons each and will be ready in 26 months. They are to be paid for in cash, whereas a Polish ship recently built in Italy was paid for in coal.

Reich Reported Buying Material for Uniforms

Roubaix, France, March 27 (AP).—Brokers here said today that German agents were buying huge quantities of cotton and wool products, mainly materials suitable for uniforms, and paying above the market price for immediate delivery.

They said representatives of German firms had bought more than 11,000,000 pounds of wool, representing three months' French production, in the last few days.

Italy Building Super-Bomber For Sky Fleet

Will Train 800 Aviators This Year in Speeding Air Program.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, March 27.—Italy announced a fast tempo for her military aviation program today to renew her sky fleet in half the scheduled time of six years.

Guiseppe Valle, undersecretary of aviation, told the Chamber of Deputies the move was made "for reasons easily understood."

Valle revealed the construction of super-bombardment planes and said 800 men would be trained as aviators this year instead of 400 as put through the course last year.

The undersecretary said Italy would not engage in any further long-distance flights, referring to the long trips of Italo Balbo's squadrons. He said the uncertain moments of the present require the concentration of all energies in perfecting a powerful air force.

The bombing planes under construction, he said, are capable of carrying 3,300 pounds of explosives over a radius of 1,250 miles at a speed of 210 miles an hour and at a height of 8,000 meters. Others, he said, are capable of moving at 250 miles an hour at a height of 10,000 meters.

The authoritative Giornale d'Italia said the Anglo-German meeting in Berlin was perhaps "the most backward step along the path of general understanding."

Referring to the conversations between Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler and Sir John Simon, British foreign secretary, the paper declared the negative results make the conference at Stresa among representatives of Italy, France and Britain more important than ever.

Princeton Athlete Denies Dormitory Theft Charge

Princeton, N. J., March 27 (AP).—Frank B. John, 22, Princeton University football star, pleaded not guilty today to grand larceny charges in connection with a series of thefts from dormitory rooms which netted $2,000 in jewelry and cash. He was released on $800 bail.

Winthrop Partello, 21, of New York City, who also pleaded not guilty to similar charges, was freed on $1,000 bail. John was implicated by Partello, in whose room in New York many of the stolen articles allegedly were found.

Litvinoff Waits Eden; Sessions To Open Today

Moscow Contends a Crisis Worse Than World War Threatens Mankind.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, March 27.—A catastrophe as great as, if not greater than, the World War threatens mankind, authoritative Russian sources contended this evening as Maxim Litvinoff, commissar for foreign affairs, awaited the arrival of Capt. Anthony Eden to start Anglo-Russian peace conversations.

The youthful British lord privy seal, coming straight to Moscow from his conversations with Adolf Hitler in Berlin, was to cross the Russian border tonight and arrive here at 11:35 a. m. tomorrow.

He was scheduled to see Joseph Stalin, Soviet dictator, in the latter's simply furnished office in the Kremlin Friday, meanwhile holding several conferences with Litvinoff, of which the first is set for tomorrow afternoon.

Insistence of the official press that the re-arming Reich threatens Russia and that the conflict growing out of any German attack would spread all over Europe and Asia reflected Litvinoff's thesis that "peace is indivisible."

For this reason foreign observers believed the Russians would marshal their every resource to convince Eden that the only safe course for England as well as for the rest of the world is to bring united pressure to bear on Germany to induce her to accept the eastern security pact she has hitherto scorned.

Any compromise measure England or Germany might produce would be viewed with suspicion, in the opinion of these observers.

Eden also will be taken to visit Soviet factories, including an airplane plant, and the Red army hall. He will leave Monday on his return trip to London that will take him by Warsaw and Praha.

In an apparent effort to clear diplomatic decks of other issues in preparation for Anglo-Russian conversations, Litvinoff earlier today exchanged cablegrams with Foreign Minister Koki Hirota, of Japan, in which each protested his nation's determination to preserve peace in the Far East.

Hirota said the same "spirit of cooperation" that led to the agreement for Russia's sale of the Chinese Eastern Railway to the Japanese-protected State of Manchukuo would "guarantee solution of other remaining questions," while Litvinoff said "further fruitful cooperation" would abolish causes of conflict.

The third bill would permit an increase of 1,000 in the number of officers, now 5,499. The cost would be just short of $2,000,000 a year.

"Our purpose," Vinson said, "is to build up the line-officer strength of the Navy to meet the essential demands of the treaty Navy now authorized and in the process of construction."

The measure would give each member of the Senate and House an additional appointment to the Naval Academy annually until they have five each, instead of three as at present.

Allegany Opposed To Pension Board

Fight on Commission Plan Is Started.

By the Associated Press.

Cumberland, Md., March 27.—The clause in the pending State old-age pension bill, providing for a commission to administer the funds, today had the opposition of the board of commissioners of Allegany County.

The local commissioners, at their meeting yesterday, recommended that the bill be amended so that the pensions would be granted by the county boards, instead of a commission appointed by the State.

David W. Sloan, attorney for the commissioners, was directed to communicate with the Allegany County delegation in the General Assembly, suggesting such an amendment to the old-age pension measure.

100,000 Nazi Rioters Demand Powers Save Four 'Martyrs'

Mass Meetings Held Throughout Reich as Protest.

At Munich, the local Lithuanian consul general, Herr Odendahl, a German citizen, resigned in protest against the sentences. He removed the Lithuanian insignia from his residence.

At the Lustgarten demonstration in Berlin, a telegram was read for Hitler protesting the Kaunas verdict, the message from the meeting adding "We swear to protect Memel's right to freedom."

"Fuehrer, Hit Them!"

The crowds before the chancellery chorused:

"Fuehrer, hit them!"

"Down with the blood verdict!"

"Free our Memel brothers!"

For the first time in months, the old Nazi battle cry: "Germany Awake! Judah Perish!" resounded in the capital's streets.

The march on the legation began at an anti-Lithuanian demonstration in Wittenbergplatz, in Berlin's fashionable West End.

A determined band of 200 men broke through the first police cordon and raced one block nearer the Lithuanian legation before they were again checked. They milled about, in ugly mood, shouting:

"Down with Lithuania! Down with the Lithuanian villains! Set our brothers free!"

They sang "Deutschland Uber Alles" and the "Horst Wessel," Nazi anthem, lustily, while a large portable automobile siren shrieked ceaselessly.

The government, spurred by the wave of anger sweeping the nation, is contemplating urgent steps to prevent the execution of the four men, sentenced yesterday in a mass court-martial of 122 Germans charged with participating in a plot to separate the Memel district from Lithuauian control, as provided under the League of Nations.

Reichsfuehrer Hitler, personally interested deeply in the incident and the fate of the German population in Memel, may demand a thorough showdown.

Powers Approached.

Reliable reports said the powers guaranteeing Memel's autonomy under Lithuanian sovereignty already are being urged informally to act speedily, particularly with a view to halting the executions.

If these informal moves are not productive, formal notes probably will be dispatched to France, Great Britain, Italy and Japan, demanding action.

Rumors hinted even at a German ultimatum to Lithuania, but it was insisted in responsible quarters that occupation of Memel by the Reichswehr (army) was out of the question unless the situation becomes considerably more acute.

2 Britons Assail Conduct of Trial

By the Associated Press.

Riga, Latvia, March 27.—Sentences imposed on 91 Memel Nazis for an asserted plot to seize Memel from Lithuania were "incompatible with the evidence" and "dictated by political circumstances," two British observers at the trial in Kaunas charged tonight.

A statement issued by John Lawrence, son of the distinguished British barrister, Sir Alexander Lawrence, who remained behind after the Lithuanian military court refused to admit his father to the defendants' counsel, and his colleague, Godfrey Norris, contained the charges.

"Two of the four men sentenced to death have unshaken alibis," the statement said. "There was no evidence against the third, while the fourth, a 17-year-old boy, confessed to participation in manslaughter, but swore the others were innocent.

"The evidence of an armed uprising consists only in rumors which an English court would not consider."

Wife Fails to Appear, Bigamy Case Dropped

Danville, Va., March 27 (AP).—Because the wife he was alleged to have left in Dayton, Ohio, declined to appear against him, Ted Philip Lane was freed of a charge of bigamy in Police Court here today. Lane was said to have married Miss Anna May Bullington, of Burlington, N. C., ten days ago, although still married to Mrs. Luella Heinz Lane in the Ohio city.

tion, might not entirely disapprove the Reich's military rehabilitation, provided it remained only to check an unquestioned French hegemony and bulwark Europe against Russian Bolshevism.—Editor's note.]

Hitler's Demands.

While no official version of the results of Simon's mission was forthcoming, authoritative sources said before the cabinet met that Der Fuehrer's demands included:

Economic union with Austria.

Return of certain Czechoslovakia territory and repatriation of 3,500,000 German residents in it.

An air force the equal of the British or the French, the common level to be determined by Russia's air strength.

A navy of about 400,000 tons.

An earlier list given out by the same quarters also included Hitler's reported demand for return of Pomorze—the "Polish corridor"—but this, the most sensational report yet to reach London, was corrected immediately after Simon's return from the German capital.

The Reichsfuehrer, it was explained, merely discussed future possibilities regarding German territorial desires along the eastern frontier without making any specific demand in that connection.

Hurries to Make Report.

Hardly had the hum of his airplane's motors died away before the foreign secretary was hurrying to the cabinet session to deliver his preliminary report.

For 40 minutes the ministers listened while he presumably expounded the German thesis that it must be granted full and unfettered equality. Later Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald visited Buckingham Palace to be closeted with King George for half an hour.

It was believed the fast-moving developments in the arms situation were laid before the British ruler.

The cabinet, it was understood, will receive another report from Sir John, this fuller and more formal. It was described as believing the trip to Berlin well worth while and personal contact with the outspoken German leader entirely justified.

Dispatches from Berlin said the German foreign office expressed the opinion that Downing Street apparently had been out of touch with Simon and Capt. Anthony Eden, the other British conferee who is now en route to Moscow, that being the explanation of the misunderstanding concerning Hitler's reputed Pomorze demand.

Official Statement Today.

In the absence of an official statement, which Simon is expected to make to the House of Commons tomorrow, rumors current in London even included one to the effect that Simon and Eden have different understandings of what Hitler said.

Diplomatic quarters here expressed the opinion that the forthcoming Italo-Anglo-French conference at Stresa, Italy, has become of far greater importance with the revelation of the full import of Hitler's demands.

An armed ring around the Reich is certain to be considered at the tri-power parley, these sources said, and Great Britain is expected to have considerable difficulty in carrying out her previously expressed intention to keep aloof from such an alliance.

France and Italy are bound to reject the German demands, the diplomats asserted, so that Great Britain will find herself at the crossroads—forced to decide whether to join the former allies and whatever other countries enter the ring or remain independent, clinging to the role of umpire in the hope of preventing any events which might lead to war.

Neutral Policy Sped, Senators Hear Baruch

Hull Offers to Cooperate With Nye Committee in Embargo Study.

Urges Embargoes.

"The United States can keep out of war in Europe or in the Orient if Congress at once adopts legislation making mandatory an embargo on the export of munitions and prohibiting American loans to all belligerents without discrimination as soon as war occurs," Dr. Buell asserted, adding that Congress also should declare that "the American Navy will not be used to defend those of our citizens who attempt to make profits out of trade with belligerents," and should reorganize our military policy to provide an adequate defense of continental United States from invasion.

The tall, white-haired Baruch cited the need for formulation of a neutrality policy as on a par with the proposals to take the profit out of war once this country gets into a conflict. But before giving his opinion regarding these problems, he made a frank exposure of his financial affairs during the World War years in answer to recent criticism.

Mr. Baruch took the committee by surprise when he started out by asserting that since his character and service during the war years had been questioned, he would plunge immediately into that subject. He asked that the committee "either put an end to the insinuations and innuendoes, the existence of which I would be childish to deny, or that you find me guilty of violation of the trust and confidence imposed upon me during that period."

An Answer to Long.

As the patriarch - appearing Baruch, eyes flashing and impatiently striding before the committee table, repudiated inferences that he had used his position as chief of the War Industries Board to make money out of America's participation in the last war, the spectators and committee listened attentively.

It appeared that he was not only answering what might be termed "insinuations" made previously by the committee in announcing that the Baruch income returns for the war years had been destroyed, but was addressing himself to his most recent critics and assailants—Senator Huey P. Long (Democrat), of Louisiana, and Father Charles E. Coughlin.

Throwing open before the committee his financial records for the war years, Mr. Baruch revealed that his wealth at that time was close to $10,000,000. In 1916 he had an income of $2,301,028 on which he paid an income tax of $261,169. In 1917 his taxable income had dwindled to $617,061 and he paid $263,762 to the Treasury. In 1918 and 1919 his losses more than offset his income.

When he was called into the Government service in 1917, Mr. Baruch said, he severed all business connections and sold his seat on the New York Stock Exchnage. That was the reason, he said, why his income decreased approximately 75 per cent from 1916 to 1917.

Sold at a Loss.

He explained he sold "even at a loss when necessity arose" all securities he held connected with the war. The money he received from such sales he placed in Liberty bonds, until at the end of the war he held $5,300,000 of the Treasury bonds, receiving around $200,000 income from that source. The losses which wiped out net income in 1918 and 1919 resulted from stock sales, he explained.

"Never from the moment I was called to the Government service did I have a dollar's worth of interest in any concern manufacturing munitions of war," Mr. Baruch asserted. "Immediately upon my coming to Washington, although I was at first merely in an advisory capacity and not charged with procurement or executive responsibility, I divested myself of all holdings that even remotely touched upon my official activities.

"I took this step freely and at a heavy cost to my fortune. I made absolutely no purchases of securities except bonds, mostly Government. From the time I entered the service until I left in July, 1919, I was not a participant either directly or indirectly in any market transaction."

Mr. Baruch revealed his holdings, after he liquidated his stock holdings, comprised $8,500,000 in bonds and three investments in stocks valued at about $1,300,000.

The 3 Stocks He Retained.

The three stocks which he retained, he explained, were Alaska Juneau Gold Mining Co.; Texas Gulf Sulphur, which did not produce any sulphur during the war, and the Atolia Mining Co., a producer of tungsten. This committee had previously revealed Mr. Baruch's ownership of stock in a tungsten producing company and he went into that investment in some detail.

He said his investment in Atolia Mining dated back to 1905 or 1906. Tungsten became important as an alloy before and during the war. He said his income from the stock in 1916 was approximately $600,000.

Nevertheless, he said, he could find no purchasers for the stock in 1917 because of a fear that the mine was about worked out and there was no ore reserve and the price of the product was subject to fixing by the warring governments.

Unable to sell the stock and unwilling to resort to any subterfuge, Mr. Baruch said he ordered all dividends from it segregated from other income and given to charities and organizations doing war work, such as the Y. M. C. A., the Y. M. H. A. and the Knights of Columbus. After that decision, income from the stock amounted to about $300,000, while his donations totaled $400,000. He showed records to substantiate his contentions.

Backs 12-Point Program.

Mr. Baruch said he was ready to answer any questions the committee might care to ask about his affairs and offered to supply any data desired regarding the financial affairs of any member of his family. His frankness, however, appeared to have disarmed the committee and he was not asked to reveal more of his private affairs.

Mr. Baruch also surprised the committee when he indorsed in principle its 12-point program for taking the profits out of war by taxation. Previously he had advocated achieving a profitless war by fixing prices—setting a ceiling or maximum above which it would be illegal for prices to arise. This "ceiling" would represent the normal or prevailing peace-time price level.

The New York financier contended that while drastic taxation on income and profits during war should be adopted now, the plan also should include placing a "ceiling on prices," otherwise, he argued, "the clerk getting $200 a month would be getting $50 in real money, due to high prices."

He outlined his experience as chairman of the War Industries Board. He reminded the committee to keep in mind that "time was the essence of things" during the war and that the Army kept demanding supplies regardless of cost. He said the "cost-plus system" was "indefensible."

Some "chiselers" were found during the war, but most manufacturers were ready to cooperate, he said, explaining that he had nothing to do with contracts. He criticized providing bonus payments for performance. He described the Industries Board's efforts to reduce copper prices.

Wife, 23, Dead, County Probes Accident Claim

Husband Contends She Fell From Car; Autopsy Held at Salisbury.

By the Associated Press.

Salisbury, Md., March 27.—Wicomico County authorities today started an investigation into the death of Mrs. Madelyn Riggin, 23, after her husband, John C. Riggin, of Crisfield, reported she had fallen from his automobile.

Riggin told authorities that he, after visiting a place near Salisbury last night, was taking his wife to visit her mother in Virginia. Two miles from Salisbury, he said, Mrs. Riggin's arm struck the door latch as they were rounding a curve and she fell out into the road.

Mrs. Riggin was dead when taken by her husband to a hospital here. Sheriff Charles H. Truitt was informed that the only mark of injury on her was a small bruise on the head. Riggin, who had been held, was released late today.

An autopsy was performed by Dr. Charles R. Truitt, jail physician, on an order of State's Attorney Rex A. Taylor and Acting Coroner S. King White.

Confession Of Error.

After an acrimonious and confused debate in which party affiliations were forgotten, the Senate voted to repair some of the damage done by its approval of the McKellar rider to an appropriation measure designed to oust civil service employes transferred from the disbanded Prohibition Service to the Alcohol Tax Unit of the Treasury.

The civil service status of these employes had, it seems, been forfeited as the result of an executive order issued in 1933. However, Senator McKellar admits that the Civil Service commissioners "swore that they knew nothing in the world about the President's order separating them (the employes) from the service." Furthermore, the Senator himself was entirely unaware that his rider would be construed as applicable to almost twice the number of men whom he wished to displace because they had been selected for reinstatement by a Government official suspected of Republican sympathies.

Unfortunately, or possibly fortunately, the rider proved to be a boomerang that would have wrecked the enforcement work of the Alcohol Tax Unit if it had been observed. The examinations intended to retest the fitness of these employes were not taken by a large number and were "flunked" by others. The Treasury, therefore, permitted the disqualified individuals to work without remuneration from the first of December. The Senate has now voted to grant them back pay and decided that after May 15 only the suspended 700 whom Senator McKellar intended to separate from the service shall be forced to undergo a noncompetitive examination to test their fitness, if they have not already qualified.

The whole episode is a sordid tale of an endeavor to introduce the spoils system into a branch of the service that is even now badly handicapped by a lack of expert and courageous men. The technical rights and wrongs of the matter are completely overshadowed by the larger issue of safeguarding civil servants chosen through the merit system from malicious political attacks.

It is encouraging to find that Senators of both parties from all sections of the country professed genuine concern over the effect of the McKellar rider. Senator Ashurst apologized for voting for the rider and offered a very ill-received apology for Senator McKellar by saying that the latter "did not know what he was doing or he would not have done it."

The public at least now knows that a large number of qualified individuals were deprived of their civil service status, acquired by examination, and forced to submit to new and allegedly unsuitable tests of fitness. The belated compromise proposal approved by the Senate is far from adequate, but it is a great deal better than a refusal to make any confession of error.

New Breed For Alaska.

The FERA does not announce whether any one by the name of McGrew will be among the contingent of 200 families being sent to Alaska as homesteaders. If there is, it's a safe bet that his eminent grandfather, widely gazetted as "Dangerous Dan," would never have deigned to acknowledge him.

The program, which is a reminder of frontier expansion in other depressions, calls for the careful selection of colonizing families from the relief rolls of northern Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota. Estimates of the cost run to $3,000 a farm, repayment of which together with 3 per cent interest will be expected in 30 years.

However praiseworthy the enterprise of these twentieth century pioneers and whatever the romance in the spectacle of 1,000 souls transplanting themselves some 3,000 miles from their accustomed hearthstones, their ruggedness must wilt in comparison with the hairy-eared roustabouts who trekked through the Yukon and Skagway in the days of the Klondike rush of '98.

For these new settlers go north with a convoy of 400 men drafted from transient camps. They will undertake the construction of a tent city for the summer months and of permanent houses for the newcomers. These, according to the FERA statement, will contain from one to three bedrooms to be equipped with running water. Forty acres of improved land, together with necessary farming equipment, has been allotted to each settler. A community center will be constructed and a school and nondenominational church erected, as well as a creamery, cannery and necessary store buildings. The emigrants will take along their household belongings, while tractors and live stock will be provided for them. Gasoline lighting is to be used, but the official announcement adds, somewhat apologetically, "for the present there will be no baths installed."

It is this last statement that will account for most of subterranean tossing and turning in the northland, we venture. No baths? Shades of the Lady Who's Known as Lou and the Kid Who Handled the Music Box! No baths? They would have thought that a rich one in the Malamute Saloon!

But baths or no baths, there is a better breed of men casting off from Seattle today. We wish them luck; their git-uppance, at least, deserves it.

Fruits Of Conflicting Policies.

The National Industrial Recovery Board has authorized certain branches of the cotton textile industry to curtail hours of machine operation by not more than 25 per cent, and to reduce the number of machines in use to the same extent. As a result, certain employes within the industry will find their present 40-hour week cut to 30 hours. The change has been adopted as a means of restricting output in face of falling demands which have caused inventories to pile up and led to sales below production costs.

This enforced 30-hour week in textile mills will not be hailed with enthusiasm by those who advocate general introduction of that expedient as a means of relieving unemployment and raising the purchasing power of the consuming masses. The cotton textile mills are simply trying to meet a grave economic emergency, due to loss of markets, by spreading a limited amount of work among persons already on their pay rolls instead of closing down mills and throwing many workers out of employment.

The crisis which confronts the industry is a convincing demonstration of the folly and futility of trying to force a 30-hour week upon employers who are unable to operate at a profit on the current basis. A short time ago the Federal Trade Commission made a partial investigation of the profits of textile manufacturers, with a view of ascertaining whether the industry could stand a wage increase. It reported that during the first half of 1934 the profits of cotton mills, computed as a percentage of their investment, declined to less than 4 per cent, while during the two succeeding months the average mill had a deficit. Since then, conditions have evidently shown no improvement. Indeed, the Cotton Code Authority states that virtually the entire industry has been "in the red" since last September.

Prominent among the causes of this depressed condition are the high processing taxes levied by the AAA for the benefit of the farmer, and the rise in prices of raw cotton, which has also added to production costs. The resultant advance in selling prices of cotton goods has limited domestic demand, brought about a loss in export markets and greatly increased the quantity of imported textiles from Japan.

The plight of the cotton textile industry affords another striking illustration of the irreconcilable conflict between the efforts of the Administration to revive industry at home by price-raising expedients while trying to expand foreign trade in competition with countries in which prices have been greatly depressed. In this case the situation has been aggravated by the imposition of heavy processing taxes upon the raw material. Farmers for whose benefit such taxes are levied must in the long run be unfavorably affected by the decline in demand for the processed products.

In authorizing a reduction in working hours, the Cotton Code Authority is, therefore, making an indirect acknowledgment of the failure of the program of lower hours and higher per-unit wages to provide a sure road to recovery. The present action is frankly an emergency device for distributing a smaller amount of work and wages among employes. It provides no permanent or adequate solution for the problems of over-capacity or under-consumption. In the cotton textile, as in other industries that require enlarged outlets for their products, revival can not be forced by adding to the costs of production and hence forcing an advance in prices. What is needed is lower prices that will stimulate consumer demands, especially during a period when all classes of society have suffered severe reductions in income.

Rambling Debate.

Senator Glass is sponsoring a resolution which would confine debate to "relevant" discourse whenever an appropriation bill is under consideration. He admits that there is very little hope that the Senate will approve his proposal, but the rambling character of the debate on the relief bill has stiffened his resolve to try to force action. It is, however, impossible to conceive of a Senate forced to debate only the question supposed to be pending. The Congressional Record—often a most amusing document when the Senators let their thoughts roam, or try to talk a measure to death—would become as dull as it superficially appears to be.

The Senate might, however, escape from the restraints imposed by the Glass resolution by debating the question as to what subject matter is or is not relevant. The favorite poems inserted into the Record might be analyzed and interpreted to determine their cognation. The lengthy passages quoted from the Scriptures by Senator Long when he engages in filibustering tactics often have a certain relevancy that can not be denied, however irritating his tactics may be.

Then what shall be done about the Senators who are unable to distinguish between relevant and irrelevant arguments? It would take a very wise and patient presiding officer to discover pertinent arguments in certain impassioned harangues that are a substitute for reasoned advocacy or disapproval of given measures. So, even if the Senate were inclined to lend a willing ear to the protests of Senator Glass, it is doubtful whether his resolution could do much to prevent his colleagues from discussing everything under the sun when appropriation bills are considered. That would be asking too much of any deliberative body.

Just Another Experiment?

Although the President has gone fishing, it is reported that his chief lieutenants in Washington are ready to spring into action as soon as Congress passes the $4,880,000,000 public works resolution. Apparently a tentative spending program has been worked out and the administrative organization has been set up. Of course, these facts are carefully guarded from Congress, but very soon after that body has placed its stamp of approval on the measure it will be able to obtain at least a general idea of what it has sanctioned.

Throughout the debate on the public works resolution the Senate failed to obtain any specific information as to how the money would be spent. The Administration has either deliberately withheld its plans or it is now prepared to rush headlong into another experiment that may repeat the blunders of the CWA. In either event, the representatives of the people assembled on Capitol Hill have reduced their function to the solemn farce of signing on the dotted line and waiting to learn from bureaucratic chieftains what is the real meaning of their action.

Fear that a large part of the new public works fund may be frittered away on inconsequential projects is accentuated by reports that Harry L. Hopkins will become the chief deputy administrator. Mr. Hopkins is the New Deal's champion spender. Secretary Ickes has had more experience in the administration of public works than any other official. But it appears that he can not dispose of money fast enough. No doubt Mr. Ickes will have a place in the new organization, but present indications are that he must surrender the chief roles to others who are more adept in disposing of public funds.

President Roosevelt will probably retain the titular chairmanship of the public works council or committee, but that will not minimize the responsibility he is expected to delegate to Mr. Hopkins, Dr. Tugwell and Admiral Peoples. Less is known about the spending proclivities of the latter two. But Admiral Peoples is the Treasury official who suggested construction of Federal gasoline stations along superhighways to be financed by the Government. And Dr. Tugwell's mind is a rich compendium of ways and means to spend money for the benefit of the farmer.

No doubt a large number of jobs will be created within a short time. By the same token a vast sum of money will be spent in a short time. If these funds are poured into "pump priming" ventures undertaken chiefly to make work and put money into circulation; there is grave danger that recovery will be delayed instead of hastened. Reports that the "pump primers" and the spenders are to have the inner track in the new public works council cast an ominous cloud over this unprecedented experiment. The President has taken upon his own shoulders an inestimable responsibility by which his fortunes may be determined for a number of years.

Stick To The Issue.

Before approving the confirmation of Riley Elgen's appointment for a new term as a member of the Public Utilities Commission, Senator McCarran insists upon learning the Commissioner's views on public ownership of utilities. Consequently, approval of the appointment is delayed and the essential work of regulating utility rates in the District is handicapped.

The Senator from Nevada thinks that the local government should own and operate the utilities now serving the District. Apparently, he wishes to know whether Mr. Elgen agrees with him before approving the latter's nomination. In other words, the Senator is trying to use a diligent public servant to promote his own ideas without regard for the disservice he may render the District in the meantime.

We do not know whether Mr. Elgen favors public ownership of utilities. We do not care. His views on this matter are entirely irrelevant to the question at issue. The P. U. C. is a regulating agency which has nothing to do with the formulation of policy. What the Senate District Committee should concern itself with is the record of that agency, under Mr. Elgen's chairmanship, in bringing about the reduction of rates on a basis that protects the public interest without denying reasonable earnings to the private utilities now serving the District. The very favorable rates prevailing here in comparison with other cities testifies to the effectiveness of his work.

Congress would be grossly unfair to the District as well as to Mr. Elgen if it should permit extraneous issues to detract from the necessity of efficient regulation in considering this appointment.

Municipal Ownership.

Detroit News.

Trying to find out what the typical American home ought to be paying for its electrical energy, the Federal Power Commission has made a most interesting survey. It is announced that the study is for fact-finding and not to determine the reasonableness of rates charged.

To begin with, the commission picked the typical American home and finds that it is in a five-room house consisting of living room, dining room, kitchen and two bedrooms. This standard home is taken for comparison because its needs are practically the same in all communities of like size.

And this is the interesting revelation that may make some city authorities think: The folks who live in these little five-room houses in the City of Cleveland pay the smallest electricity bills that are paid in the United States. And this is due to the fact that Cleveland has a municipally owned and operated plant.

Helping Bondholders.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On March 7 I bought a railroad bond paying $60 a year interest for $192.50. Two days after I bought this bond there was an announcement in the press that RFC did not consider it in the public interest for the railroad to be reorganized and that therefore the RFC would renew the loan to this railroad.

Conversely, therefore, it is in the public interest to borrow money from the widow and orphan at 2¾ per cent and lend this money to the above railroad so that they may pay me 30 per cent plus.

Ain't it grand, Mabel?

S. P. KNIGHT.

Washington, March 25.

A Willing Taxpayer.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Sometimes it seems that here in Washington we are too close to the scene of action to have a clear view of what is being done—to use a stock expression, we can not see the forest for the trees.

For this reason, I was glad to have an expression of opinion in a letter from a friend in the Middle West: "Generally speaking, I believe conditions are much improved. The sales tax plan, together with increased income taxes, would, in my opinion, be the fairest and surest way of raising the badly needed revenue."

This is a patriotic sentiment from a man who has a small income and heavy obligations. He feels, no doubt, that he would have no income at all, and could do no purchasing at all, if he had not the benefit and protection of living under a sound government, and feels also that he should be willing to sacrifice a small portion of his income through income tax and sales tax, to help keep his Government stable.

Why should anyone fortunate enough to be receiving even a small income object to putting his shoulder to the wheel to help keep the Government from becoming too deeply involved in debt in a time of emergency? READER.

Alibi For Lynching.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Wagner-Costigan antilynching bill, like gentle spring, is with us again.

If the different States want to pass antilynching bills, let them do so, but I do not believe that such a law as the Wagner-Costigan bill or law would be constitutional.

It seems to the writer that one of the chief causes for lynching has been overlooked. It is the fact that so many criminals, because of some technicality, are allowed to go free. And even if convicted, appeal from one court to another until they get to the United States Supreme Court, which procedure generally takes two or three years and costs the State or country thousands of dollars. This is one of the reasons why there are so many lynchings in this country.

People get disgusted with the slow process of the law, the miscarriage of justice, and consequently they take the law into their own hands. Madmen have no ears, and the ruling passion conquers reason still.

Congress passed the eighteenth amendment, but that did not stop people from drinking liquor, and so it will do no good to pass antilynching laws—until the real cause has been removed to make the punishment fit the crime.

"Academic Freedom."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your paper of February 27 there appears an editorial headed "Academic Freedom," and commending a definition as enunciated by one of our educational associations.

Thank you for your editorial. It is one that should be widely copied throughout this land on account of its timeliness. We are too prone in these tense moments to draw upon borrowed and untoward classifications. We hear such terms as Communist, Fascist, Bolshevik and the like employed all too freely.

Such attempts to describe our feeling against change, I suppose, is the first and normal reaction. This is because it is the easy way at attempted description of the situation.

On the part of some there is a tendency to destroy by a type of witless intolerance the very thing they profess to protect.

What we need at this moment is great understanding and high courage that will uphold the cardinal principles of our Constitution. Your editorial commends this attitude to us. CLOYD H. MARVIN,

President George Washington University.

From A Disabled Veteran.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Will you please print this letter in answer to an item in your paper of March 19 by a man who signed his name as John Gibbs Lovell, Spokane, Wash., dated March 13?

Didn't the men in civilian life take big wages and profits from their jobs or business, while the soldier received $30 per month and paid insurance and allotments back home out of that money? He admits they did serve their country and served it well. If they had not our country and our money men would be paying out more money for other purposes than they are to what he admits are the country's heroes, then, but which he has already forgotten deserve the respect and assistance in time of need just as they rendered their country in time of its need.

He calls asking for their adjusted service certificate "panhandling." That is an insult to the veterans he once called "heroes." He further states this money is due the veterans when the proper time comes. Doesn't that make your red blood rise up, as it did in 1917 and 1918? You didn't expect anything more from an enemy, but you did from a man who calls you a hero one time and a panhandler the next time. How many veterans does he think will be here on January 1, 1945, to receive his bonus money, as the public is inclined to call the hardest, most cruel and dangerous money any man ever earned on this earth?

I have stood at the foot of these veterans' graves; I have been in their homes; have seen their hardships and misery and pain, lack of necessities of clothes and food for their families.

One veteran I know took a feed sack and made his little girl a dress out of that. Before he received assistance from our post here, another veteran I know (and can give his name and address, with his permission, if necessary) drew half of his bonus money. When he was granted that much privilege he placed it on a little suburban home and was drawing $12 per month disability from the Government. He made his payments until he was furloughed from his job, then had his $12 per month disability money cut off; fell back on his monthly payments, lost his little home and all of his payments he had made on it, and then was ordered out of his own little home that he had been trying to buy to give his wife, one child and his old father a comfortable and warm place to live in.

This is being written by a former service man who went overseas early in 1918 and was wounded in action in the trenches on September 25, 1918.

I was under shell fire all that day from 5 a. m.; was cornered in a shell hole with an airplane overhead (German), giving the artillery the range of my position. I lay with my face in the mud with shells bursting all around me, nearly covering me up with dirt, and each time a shell burst the concussion would render me almost unconscious, being already wounded, and by myself. My buddies had left me there and were trying to get to safety as best they could, for it was every man for himself. And then a runner came across and helped me through some barbed-wire entanglements into a trench dugout. When the artillery blew the top of it off we escaped under cover of darkness down a road to a little French town and I was put in an old stone house by myself with nothing over me but an old raincoat. Boys' Pockets Unchanged.

In an upside world, in which old standards are abolished nightly by some new Messiah with a microphone, it is pleasing to realize that one great American institution does not change greatly with the years. An examination of the contents of the pockets of 32 boys, selected at random at the Madison Square Boys Club of New York revealed the following inventory:

Ends of pencils, broken penholders, rubber daggers, old movie programs, empty boxes, Christmas seals, bits of colored and broken glass, ends of string and rope, buttons, whistles, candy, pieces of chalk, a total of 59 cents and 25 handkerchiefs and a great miscellany of articles of which only one was found, including a sock.

While no sociological conclusion was looked for or established by the survey, it is nonetheless an assurance that human nature in one of its aspects stands like a rock. Man or boy, the run of us are gatherers of things laid away against the day when they will "come in handy." That they rarely do only suggests how strongly instinct works in the human animal. Only the most emancipated among us refuse to be slaves to property, if not of ends of string and buttons, then of more imposing litter that may even run into important money and earn an occasional one among us the name of being a great collector.

The Post Impressionist

Duke James vs. King James

Post Office, Thursday.

WE have just one more word to say in the Monmouth Controversy. Let the movies do what they please about this alleged son of England's Charles II; the Post Impressionist remains unconvinced by all critics who maintain that the fellow deserved any better fate than he received.

* * *

Most of Monmouth's defenders can quote, in his defense, no reliable authority. The least prejudiced of their authors is Allan Fea, whose book on the subject appeared in 1901. Yet Fea proved in many matters hopelessly inaccurate. He believed that Monmouth not only wrote but composed the reply to Argyll's secretary: a feat of which Monmouth was manifestly mentally incapable. Aliesbury and Reresby both disagree with Fea as to the extent of Charles' belief in the "Popish Plot." And, whereas Fea discredits the story that Charles had a son born on the Isle of Jersey in 1646, the King's own letters to the General of the Jesuits frankly acknowledge that fact.

The truth is that, though Monmouth was sometimes brave, he was more often cowardly. He was always ungrateful. He was a consummate liar, a venomous enemy, a false friend. Even Lely's famous portrait of the girl-faced duke shows him to have been rather pretty than handsome—hints that, if not entirely evil, he was wholly weak.

Monmouth did fight bravely in the Second Dutch War, and his return was the occasion for national rejoicing. But he immediately began to capitalize this applause and to take an undeniably active part in the plots which were intended to secure him the succession to the throne by ousting either the King himself or discrediting James, Duke of York, the King's brother.

Monmouth tried to keep this uncle abroad, and so incensed Charles that a flight to Amsterdam soon seemed advisable. Then Shaftsbury began to reawaken the public in the young man's favor. Through lampoons and pamphlets, there was a clamor for the divorce of the Queen and the dismissal of the King's mistress. The exile, prevailed upon to steal back home, was again welcomed with bells and bonfires. The death of a son of Monmouth softened Charles for a time—but another plot followed: Robert Ferguson and the former tutor, Ross produced the "Black Box" with its documents that attempted to legitimatize Monmouth; their spurious character was demonstrated; Charles' anger flamed.

Nevertheless, the black sheep of the court now remained the hero of the people. His connection with Grey's abduction of Lady Grey's sister could not lessen his popularity. Mobs drank his health and damnation to Charles and York.

It was too much for Monmouth. He resumed his career of conspiracy.

* * *

Lord Russell's plot followed. Summary arrests—Monmouth's among them—cut that flower in the bud.

Useless for temperamentally merciful Charles to permit the chief prisoner's release on bail; the prison doors had scarcely opened for him when the Rye House Plot was discovered. What if the scapegrace repented in his usual pleasant fashion? What if he, as jauntily as ever, implicated his partisans? What if he received an unofficial pardon? He merely passed on to more backslidings of the same sort—thence to more confessions. Indeed, he merely passed into a last exile, with a Dutch court behind him—and, while in Holland, lost his best friend by the death of Charles.

* * *

This ended the David and Absolom performance. The contest was now a contest between James the Duke and James the King.

The miserable story of that fiasco, Macaulay—who, however, fails to acknowledge his great debt to Roberts—has made enough familiar. The opera bouffe landing at Tynne, the undisciplined little army's progress under "King Monmouth" and the tragedy upon Sedgemoor are all well known.

* * *

Monmouth ran away.

He was pursued. He was probably betrayed by his frightened followers—as he, had he had profitable chance, would infallibly have betrayed them. He was captured.

And little short of shameful were his subsequent attempts to cast all the blame of the rebellion upon his comrades. Little short of craven were his appeals for clemency from that King James to keep whom from the throne the captive had for years labored.

There is only one good thing to be recorded of Monmouth in this last act of his pitiful drama. When he found that no ignominy would buy his life, he met the end of it courageously and with a sturdy, if characteristically histrionic, defense of Lady Henrietta Wentworth's good name upon his lips.

* * *

After all, the kindliest epitaph ever given "King Monmouth" was given him by one of the two kings he had so deeply wronged:

"Poor Monmouth," sighed James I, years later: "he was always easy to be imposed upon!"

Does A Bureaucracy Threaten The Nation?

By John Dickinson.

NO more frequent charge is brought against some of the activities of the Federal Administration than that they involve a dangerous and unwarranted increase of bureaucracy. Behind and apart from the merely disparaging implications of the word, this charge of bureaucracy seems more or less reducible in the minds of those who bring it to three specific charges; first, that there is too great an enhancement of the functions and powers of executive agencies of government at the expense of the legislative and judicial agencies; second, that the Government is undertaking to perform too many functions, and, third, that for the foregoing or other reasons there is too great an increase in the number of governmental employes, and consequently in the expenses of government and the resulting burden on the taxpayer.

These three charges are seldom clearly distinguished by those who fear bureaucracy, and when thus cumulated into an undifferentiated mass impression, they constitute a disquieting picture, each part serving to heighten the lurid shadows of the rest. Naturally, no part of the total impression is more portentous than that which implies violation of supposed constitutional principles through the vesting in executive agencies of powers which belong properly to legislature or judiciary.

This last charge is not new. In being urged against the so-called New Deal legislation, it is simply being made to do a fresh turn of duty after having served steadily for 50 years against most of the important legislation enacted during that period. As a preliminary to examining the merits of the charge, it will be helpful to look at some special reasons which give it a perennial appeal to certain elements of American opinion.

The first of these is the tendency to distrust and disparagement of the executive branch of Government merely as such, which results from an oversimplified and conventionalized reading of English and American governmental history during the seventeenth century. During that period the English executive was the Crown, a hereditary governmental organ not chosen by any process of election, and still claiming to rule by inherent right rather than by delegation of authority from the people. In the American colonies there was the additional fact that the executive in the person of the colonial governor represented in most colonies the alien power of the mother country, 3,000 miles away, in opposition to the will of the local legislators. It was primarily for these reasons that the struggle for liberty took the form of a struggle against the executive, rather than because of anything inherently hostile to liberty in the nature of executive power.

THE separation-of-powers doctrine apparently implies in the popular mind a government rigidly organized along the following simple lines. In the first place, the Legislature, consisting of a body of elected representatives, must formulate of its own initiative, and enact in the form of laws, all State-enforceable rules and regulations governing conduct. At this point the executive steps in, in the person of the public prosecutor and the sheriff or marshal with their deputies, and undertakes to discover any infraction or supposed infraction of these laws. In the event of discovery of a supposed infraction, the individual under suspicion is brought by the executive before a court representing the third, or judicial, branch of the Government.

Of course, no government functioning exclusively along these lines could satisfy the needs of even the simplest frontier community. In the first place, they omit all provision for any public service, as distinguished from purely regulatory, functions of government. In even the simplest and most individualistic communities such public-service functions are represented by the construction and maintenance of roads and bridges, if not of schools. Indeed, in our American communities of colonial times, they sometimes extended to maintenance of such service agencies as sawmills, grist mills, breweries and the like.

If any legislative body today were to undertake to give not an increased but merely the same, measure of attention to the life of the community, which legislatures gave a hundred years ago, it would find the task completely beyond its physical capacities. Unless, therefore, as the size of our communities and the complexity of our social and economic dealings increase, we are to have a progressively decreasing amount of governmental intervention and control, our legislatures must act in progressively less and less detail, which means that they must more and more utilize the agency of administrative officials.

ONE device to which American legislatures early resorted in order to increase their ability to cover the necessary field of action has been to handle their business almost exclusively through committees. The members of each committee devote practically their whole time to a special class of questions, either banking, insurance, public utilities, or the like, and, except in the case of measures of unusual public interest, the results of the labors of these specialized committees are accepted and ratified with very little question by the entire legislative body. This delegation of the functions of the entire body to a small part of the membership illustrates the same physical necessity as the further delegation to administrative officials.

When the Legislature decides to provide protection for the public in some such manner as purity of foods or drugs, it does not attempt the impossible task of defining specifically in the statute what particular combination of ingredients constitutes impurity in the case of each and every article of food or medicine, but indicates its purpose of requiring that the foods and medicines offered for sale shall be pure and unadulterated, and defines the broad sense in which these terms are used. The legislature then sets up a specialized agency to enforce this statute, whether by granting permits or licenses, or by receiving and passing upon complaints, or by making inspections and orders, as the statute may provide.

It must be remembered that, apart from the protection of the courts, any interpretation of a statute laid down in an administrative regulation is subject to correction or repeal by the Legislature itself. One of the purposes sought to be accomplished by the delegation of power to make administrative rules and regulations is to provide greater flexibility and adaptability of the law to changing conditions of technology and the arts than would exist if too detailed regulations were permanently frozen into the statute itself. If, however, an administrative regulation, even when sustained by the courts, is, nevertheless, thought by the Legislature to be at variance with the then legislative purpose, it can be wiped out as effectively as if it had been originally written into the statute, and in all probability more promptly. There are thus two great safeguards against abuse of administrative rules and regulations—the Legislature and the courts.

• • • •

ADMINISTRATIVE power exercised under such safeguards is a vastly different thing from the bureaucratic power of the ministries of an absolute monarchy which John Stuart Mill had in mind in the famous passage in which he contrasted bureaucratic with representative government. Furthermore, it must be remembered that our administrative officials are as much servants of the people as are our legislative officials. In the State governments many of them are chosen by popular election. Even when appointed, they are designated by a popularly elected chief magistrate, whose policies must be brought to the test of approval by the people at the polls.

It has long become apparent that no abstract formula other than the public convenience and welfare at a given time can determine the proper scope of governmental activities. The liberty of individuals in our Anglo-Saxon tradition means not immunity from government, but liberty under law, and law means restraint for the common welfare. Under the increasingly congested and interdependent conditions of modern living, new governmental restrictions are being continually introduced, often in substitution for older forms of restriction which have become obsolete and are abandoned. We are not permitted to operate motor vehicles on the highways without an examination to determine competency. We are not permitted to sell milk or meat without an inspection to determine its purity and fitness for human consumption. We are not permitted to erect buildings without a permit and inspection to determine their safety. Will anyone claim that such restrictions are an invasion of liberty in any real sense, or in any sense that men have fought for? Will anyone claim that we would be better off without them?

It is, of course, conceivable that the field of governmental regulation might be extended to the point where the number of officials needed to administer it would become so large as to constitute an intolerable burden on the rest of the community. If that point were reached, it would no doubt be an indication that the scope of governmental action had been unduly enlarged. That it has been reached is the impression frequently sought to be produced by those who warn us of the dangers of bureaucracy. The figures disprove this contention.

The total number of persons employed today in the combined service of the State and local as well as the Federal governments amounts to less than 3,000,000 or approximately only 2½ per cent of the population. This proportion would have seemed slight to our New England ancestors with their multiplicity of fence viewers, hog reeves, haywards, surveyors, sealers and other town officials.

• • • •

IF today the cost of government is high and the annual budgetary outlays large, these expenditures are not primarily for the payment of an army of officials. They are, in great part, payments of interest on sums laid out in the construction of roads and public buildings, and payments to contractors, material men, laborers, and the like. In the case of the Federal Government approximately 30 per cent of the ordinary budget is for interest payable to the bondholders who advanced the funds for our expenditures in the Great War. Twenty-seven per cent is paid out to veterans and other recipients of war pensions. About 16 per cent goes to the maintenance of the Army and Navy and the purchase of military equipment.

The amount of the Federal emergency or recovery budget which goes to the maintenance of Government officials is negligible. The large sums included in this budget are either distributed in the form of relief to the needy unemployed or represent recoverable loans advanced to banks, railroads, homeowners and farmers. The pay roll of officials constitutes hardly 10 per cent of the outlay of the Federal Government.

No one would deny that it is well for a democratic government to be on its guard against bureaucracy in the sense of an inefficient, irresponsible and overgrown army of public employes. The weakness in the charge of bureaucracy which is so steadily dinned into our ears is, that like the cry of "wolf," it may deaden us to the danger should the danger really come. And, in the meanwhile, it serves to prevent a frank and fruitful examination of many measures on their merits by dragging a false scent across the trail.

Symphony Book

By

Wm. Lyon Phelps

EVERYONE who is not a professional musician wishes, whenever he hears a symphony by Beethoven, Brahms, Schumann, that he really knew something about it.

Well, to give these thousands of excellent men and women not only what they want but what they need, there has just been published "The Victor Book of the Symphony," by Charles O'Connell, with a Foreword by Leopold Stokowski, to which he appended his quite undecipherable signature—more obscure than the most modern music.

• • • •

This is a fine volume of more than 500 pages, well printed, with the composers arranged in alphabetical order, from Bach to Weinberger, who wrote that diverting grand opera, "Schwanda," which I heard at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

Every movement of every symphony is explained in language that can be understood by those who, like me, are not musicians. Not only are all the symphonies explained and discussed, but a great variety of other pieces, such as "The Dance of Death," by Saint-Saens; "The Afternoon of a Faun," by Debussy; "Les Preludes," by Liszt, and others.

Zihlman Fights Sleeping Sickness

Second Spinal Operation Is Performed in Maryland.

By the Associated Press.

Cumberland, Md., March 27.—A second spinal operation was performed today on former Representative Frederick N. Zihlman at the Memorial Hospital where he has been under treatment for the last five days for encephalitis, or sleeping sickness.

Hospital officials said Zihlman, who represented the Western Maryland District in Congress from 1917 to 1931, had a fighting chance to recover. They said his condition was critical.

Friends who called at the hospital to see him, said his eyes remain closed during the brief periods he is awake and his conversation is not coherent. He is being attended by Dr. L. B. Mathews, assisted by Dr. W. F. Williams.

No End of Books

Being A Brief And Audacious Tour Of That Jolly Trifle, The Encyclopedia Britannica.

By Theodore Hall.

I'VE been taking a busman's holiday these last evenings, sitting up with the 35,000,000 words of that nimble little work, the Encyclopedia Britannica. And though—you'll pardon me—I'm not quite finished with it, I'm feeling about three times as far-flung as the British flag. From Diptera (which is what flies call themselves when they're out in polite society) to the Perturbation Function of Dynamics (which is something I don't altogether get as yet) is considerable of a jump, you'll admit, and our agile editors perform its like on every page. Following after, as the hounds of spring, is a bit wearing, as a procedure. Let me set down some advices therefore, to mind when you go picnicking through the E. B. as a lay-farer.

For one thing, I give you fair warning to stay clear of any article which smells of chemistry or mathematics. To avoid this, do anything abysmally simple if you must—look up your home town (they can tell you things you didn't know unless you're a chamber of commerce secretary); look up your pastimes: Bridge, Poker, Chess, Checkers; look up Coffee-Making (written by Alice Foote McDougal herself). But three lines into Aldehydes or Infinitesimal Calculus, and the fun's gone out of the thing. You don't believe me? Here's the delicious lit'le preamble of Aldehydes, then: "An important class of chemical compounds having the chemical formula R.CHO, where R is an alkyl (aliphatic) or aryl (aromatic) radical." Surely, to say the least "aromatic radicals" belong under a different heading.

• • • •

ANOTHER class to avoid hides under the innocent looking titles of Duty, Truth, Idealism, Beauty, and so on. Make no mistake—the editors aren't going to let you off by quoting poetry at you. They'll so wind you up in language that you won't know whether it's beautiful or merely idealistic to poison your grandmother. And likewise steer away from refrigeration (unless you really do want to know how cold you should keep huckleberries), any mention of the less presentable species of weeds and bugs (the diagrams are pretty appalling), and a whole section of Arabian gentlemen whose names begin with "Ibn."

As to the great gobs of history which the E. B. offers, I remain luke warm. Some day I'll want to read about the domestic politics of Rumania, 1866-75, and some day I shall. But it's not exactly a posy to pick by the wayside.

No, what we want on an evening's tour is something neat and likely, like G. K. Chesterton on Humour or Dickens, or Isabel Ely Lord on Cookery, or such topics as these which the most glancing eye can appreciate—Investigation (how a detective works, including the dear old exhortation to look for the woman in the case); Eskimo language (these primitive gentry have 350 forms for the verb "scram," or any other verb for that matter), and my price favorite, Lighthouses.

• • • •

BUT the most satisfying enterprise of all is just to look at the illustrations. Among these 24 volumes the editors have scattered more pictures than you'd meet in a month of rotogravure sections, news reels and mailorder catalogues combined.

I hold no brief for the trivialities—sometimes I think the E. B. has gone a bit too generous in this fourteenth edition, like a mayor kissing babies. Little Rock will love it, but the rest of us don't feel particularly blessed by a carefully drawn plate showing Main street, Little Rock, looking east over a trolley-car. Nor do I quite see why every Tom, Dick and Harry highway in the country should have its little map showing how it gets, say, from Cleveland to Cincinnati. The E. B., like the NRA, might have left something for the small entrepreneurs. And a giddy, gaudy color plate of a projected theater in New York—as hideously modernistic as anything you ever turned quickly away from—could well have been left out for common charity alone.

But of the rest I've only the kindliest feelings. If you have a suppressed flare for steel-making, usually awkward in the home, the E. B. will give you pictures of the whole process from the Escanaba Range to a pin. All the art forms—from caricature to oil painting, from Japanese screens to Wedgwood pottery, from Hindu textiles to Georgian staircases—are showered with astoundingly lovely reproductions. Given a topic like London, the editors distinguish themselves by presenting a full-page photograph of London in a fog which tells more about the city than would a dozen pages of text. I don't know how you feel about maps, but the E. B. got an Edinburgh firm to do them an atlas which I could keep under my pillow.

THERE are some things, though, about this monument to human curiosity that I don't want to think of. Remembering the 3,000 learned contributors, what happened when one of them wrote in, after his material was well in type, that he was very sorry but he'd got a date wrong? And knowing from having laid out a few newspaper and magazine pages in my time, the headaches a single page can cause, how did the editors ever get 24,000 to come out so neatly? And as for the R. R. Donnelly Co., of Chicago, who can print a telephone directory before breakfast, let us not try to imagine how they got 15,000 illustrations and 35,000,000 words as clean as a whistle onto paper. The feat of collecting this data from A to Zygote seems no greater.

I don't care to consider these matters, thank you. I'm just leaning back in a chair and waiting like Wilkins Micawber, for something to turn up so I can look it up in the Britannica.

Along The Potomac

With

Carlisle Bargeron

Nature's Architect

ONE assurance from the turning over to Prof. Tugwell of a vast portion of the $5,000,000,000 program is that when he gets through, that part of the country in which he operates will not look like a volcano-torn area, but a thing of great beauty and joy. Because he is a poet and his heart sings only of the prettier music of life.

BARGERON.

This is particularly importan in connection with the soil erosion project. One can imagine what it would be if an unesthetic man were turned loose on the business of digging ditches and planting tree strips across the Middle West. The ditches would be dug and the earth simply thrown up on the side without regard to rhyme, without any thought of how it might appeal to the sensitive eye.

The professor will see that this is not done. He is a stickler for the looks of things. One may rest assured that the trenches will be laid in pretty patterns, in mosaics or engaging prints. And the earth that has been thrown up will be smoothed over and patted into a hard, correct surface covered with delightful carpets of green and with flower spots interspacing the whole.

Similarly the tree strips will be planted to give a cylindrical effect, or maybe to spell "Tugwell and the New Deal" over the West.

• • • •

Inasmuch as he is also to have charge of the great rural electrification and rural rehabilitation programs it is thought likely the erosion projects will be brilliant at night with multicolored lights hung on the trees and fingers of light racing through the trenches. Something like Broadway and Fifty-second street at theater time is the effect it is thought will be sought.

And why can't it be achieved? Men have been using, or rather just ordinary men, have been for a long time using water to make electricity. There would seem no reason why the professor with his enthusiasm should not be able to reverse the process and use electricity to make water. In this way the beautiful homes and countrysides which the professor intends to build under the farm rehabilitation phase of his work will each be supplied with a stream, a running brook rippling merrily around the hoofs of browsing cows.

If the transformation of electricity into water can not be achieved, the effect of crystal clear streams can be given with the electricity itself as they do in the electric signs. Indeed, with this artificial water every home could have a Niagara Falls, and the concert of cascading would be heard for miles and miles around.

• • • •

Under any plan of artificial streams the professor would undoubtedly use mechanical cows, animals which would be much more pleasing to the eye because they could be made to appear well-fed.

Of course, the professor's plans are not definitely known, but something may be learned of their nature from his visit to the Chicago World's Fair. He went into ecstasy over this vast display, the buildings, the planned communities, the gaudy grandeur of it all. He made a speech about it later, or wrote an article—it was when he was writing for a syndicate—and said it was a shame that all cities could not be built with the deliberateness with which the fair was set up.

I am inclined to believe that deliberateness and attention to detail with a view to having a beautiful symphony in the whole will characterize his making over of the Mississippi Valley. He may find it necessary to straighten out the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers. They have a thunder of a lot of kinks in them now and, from the air, are not what one would expect in a well-ordered country. In fact, the last time I saw the Missouri there were a lot of abandoned automobiles in it and the water was very muddy. This, of course, would not fit into the done-over picture, and it may be that the stream will be dried up and an electrical river put in its place.

As a soil erosion expert the professor is expected to work wonders. The winds sweeping down from the Western plateaus will draw up short when they reach his handiwork and laugh so heartily they will lose all their dust.

Recovery Lag Again Spreads Pessimism

Fundamentals Still Point to Recovery Despite New Deal's Third Stalemate.

By Elliott Thurston.

That recovery is again lagging—for the third time after sporadic upturns since March of 1933—and that the New Deal presents fresh confusions which are seriously worrying all its adherents who are not blindly faithful must be apparent to every impartial observer. The inevitable by-product of confusion in Washington and of current signs of another stalemate in recovery is a new wave of pessimism sweeping over the business-banking community, depressing revival and discouraging investment.

At the same time basic conditions remain conducive to a marked, even excessive expansion. Credit is abundant and cheap. A vast amount of reconstruction has taken place. There has been an incalculable but undoubtedly tremendous readjustment of debt of all sorts. Various economists offer staggering calculations, of the amount of potential business in sight if only the stalemate could be broken and "confidence" restored. In five years of depression, with stagnation in building and construction, as compared to normal times, a deficit has accumulated in innumerable lines, to say nothing of the new opportunities opening up for development of new business activities.

For reasons which are differently appraised according to different viewpoints each time an upward movement has set in it has been short-lived because of the resurgence of what is summed up in the monotonously reiterated phrase "lack of confidence." And by lack of confidence most business men and those who lend money for business mean the absence of a reasonable prospect for making a profit.

It is now generally conceded that the first upturn after March of 1933 was, in large degree, induced by fears of inflation—hence a flight from the dollar—and by a desire to beat the codes. The inflationary bubble burst when the New Deal angled for stabilization. By suddenly repudiating stabilization the Administration tried, too late, to save the bubble. After the first rush of precode production, accompanied by prices which rose faster than wages and quickly outstripped buying capacity or willingness to buy, a four months' recession set in. Then came the tinkering with gold content of the dollar, plus attempts to accelerate Government spending.

How much of the business done since March of 1933 is directly attributable to New Deal spending is probably impossible of calculation—a considerable amount, at any rate. It served, in effect, to put a bottom in recession until other forces came into play to induce an upswing. A second upturn, beginning in November of 1933 coincident with gold manipulations and devaluations of the dollar at the end of January, petered out in six months. By midsummer of last year pessimism was deeper than ever. Then by fall, after the President had appeared to adopt a more moderate, reassuring policy, a third upswing began, slowly, unevenly, but steadily. It is now wavering. Production and other indexes indicate a fourth recession. Again pessimism and defeatism are spreading.

It must be clear to all who impartially survey these sporadic, short-lived upturns that only the third and last one was soundly induced by reviving prospects of profits and that it is being killed, as were the others, because those prospects have again appeared to fade. The reasons for this will be differently assigned from different angles, no doubt, but almost all of the diagnoses agree that the basic trouble is more confusion in Washington.

• • • •

The absence of a clear-cut, coordinated program is again all too apparent. Mr. Roosevelt has left for a rest after agreeing to a "must" program calling for social security legislation, a bill allegedly to regulate, but evidently to exterminate, all holding companies; a reorganization of the Federal Reserve system implying undisclosed but drastically changed theories of a managed currency and extension of the NRA under terms and for purposes yet to be disclosed. This is on top of the $4,880,000,000 relief bill, for which no spending plan has yet emerged.

In addition, the New Deal is supporting additional measures to give organized labor a fresh impetus and commanding position, to reorganize the air mail, to extend the AAA, including more crop curtailment, and to put all communications, railroads, radio, telephones, telegraph, cables, etc., under the Interstate Commerce Commission. Congress, meantime, reverberates with fresh designs of the inflationists, silverites, bonusites and prodigal spenders in general.

That business is prostrated by the prospective, let alone the past, changes and regulations is hardly remarkable. The labor and NRA problems and their unascertainable costs on production are as yet too unsettled to create that atmosphere of "confidence" essential to long-term commitments and investments. The whole composite necessarily spells multiplied uncertainties and apprehensions. The lack of plan and precariousness of leadership make the confusion worse confounded.

Nevertheless, this is the blacker side. The latest stalemate is not collapse. The New Deal is more deeply aware of the difficulties even if it has yet to evolvle a rationalized program. Congress will not linger long when the Washington dog days set in. The larger outlines of the New Deal remain too moderate to suit the so-called radicals, though too immoderate to suit conservatives or to revive confidence sufficiently so that the normal forces of recovery will get going and stay going.

The fundamentals of recovery still persist and the pressure grows. With Congress gone as summer arrives, the New Deal will seem less fearsome and forbidding. The clouds look the blacker at this hour because the political viewers-with-alarm are coming out of the storm cellars and girding for the 1936 campaign. Domestic and especially foreign analysts are unshaken in their prophecies of American recovery—if not another boom—because of or in spite of the New Deal.

Once Overs

Kidnaping the Quints.

Canada reports a plot to kidnap the Dionne quintuplets. Who was the industrialist who said nothing big would be undertaken in 1935?

• • • •

Ontario insists there is a plan to snatch the world's five best known babies.

• • • •

A thing like that wouldn't be a kidnaping; it would be the first big break in the unemployment crisis.

• • • •

And the first case of quantity abduction.

• • • •

Police are guarding the Dafoe hospital day and night despite the fact that trying to snatch the quints would seem like trying to go through Fifth avenue with the Singer midgets without attracting attention.

• • • •

American amusement men are said to be behind the plot. But they will find handling five babies no amusement.

• • • •

How many kidnapers are to do the job has not been revealed, but common sense indicates that it will take at least ten men. One for each of three babies, the rest to get away with the two that are teething.

• • • •

The ten kidnapers will have ten women accomplices, obviously. There isn't a man in the world who would know what to do if the babies all started squalling at once.

• • • •

And the chances are that even if the police fail to see the kidnaping, they can't miss hearing it.

• • • •

The plan reported to the police calls for entering the hospital in parade formation, bundling the babies into a sightseeing bus and making a 300-mile dash to the border with all Ontario in pursuit.

• • • •

• • • •

• • • •

Both parents are said to be terribly frightened by the prospect of the babies being snatched and put into vaudeville. They're afraid it won't work.

Vicarious, of Course.

A Michigan taxpayer sent the Government an income tax of $2,304 on a total net income of the same amount. It probably wasn't an error. The man may have taken Elmer Twitchell's suggestion that a lot of trouble could be saved by sending it all to Uncle Sam and letting him refund what he liked.

The Gee-Gees Back Home.

Nothing has surprised this department more than the passage of a bill legalizing horse racing in Connecticut. The mere thought of betting on the ponies in the Nutmeg State was always considered slightly sacrilegious and highly immoral. Running horses were held to be instruments of the devil and you could heap no greater aspersion on a Connecticut man than to call him a race-track gambler.

• • • •

The police used to raid Joe McKee's sporting goods store for running a book and there were thousands of people who thought the trotting races were wicked. Lou Fisk's Branford trotting park folded up in our boyhood and even Charter Oak gave up the sulky races some years back. And now staid old Connecticut, the land of the Winthrops, the Baldwins and the Davenports, goes for the ponies and mutuels machines! It just goes to show what a Grade A depression will do.

Richberg Cites Cure for Cycle Of Boom, Bust

NRA Is Solution, He Says, Rallying Support for Its Extension.

By the Associated Press.

New Brunswick, N. J., March 27.—Tossing aside lightly charges of monopoly and oppression of small business under NRA, Donald R. Richberg tonight advanced the principle of the Blue Eagle as the only cure for the "disheartening cycle of boom and bust."

In an address at Rutgers University, the new chairman of the recovery administration's administrative board sought to rally support behind the Administration drive for the extension of NRA, recently opened by President Roosevelt, but with little immediate response from Congress.

He set up a goal of "reconstructed individualism," apparently contrasted with "rugged individualism," as an aim of the New Deal. Specifically, he asserted that the President was moving neither toward communism nor socialism.

Denies Communistic Trend.

"There is no tendency whatsoever," he said, "toward communism in the New Deal program. Nor is there any purpose to transform an individualistic, competitive system into a socialistic co-operation. There is the definite aim by co-operative means to eliminate the unfair methods and the intolerable results of an undisciplined competitive system.

"There is a world of difference between imposing social responsibility upon the owners of private property and socializing property. There is a world of difference between establishing a fair system of private profit-making and establishing a system of production for use instead of for profits."

Setting up a "general scheme of industrial cooperation" as the intent of NRA, Richberg apparently struck by inference at Senators Borah, of Idaho; Nye, of North Dakota, and others in Congress who recently have lambasted the Recovery Administration as tending toward the virtual destruction of many small businesses, while aiding larger industries in "oppressive" tactics.

"Small Businesses Protected."

"We may dismiss at once," he said, "resounding charges of encouragement of monopolies and the oppression of small enterprises.

"In the first place, the actual effect of the NRA has been to provide the only effective protections of small enterprises that have developed in 45 years of antitrust laws. Throughout trades and industries the major body of support for the NRA has come and is coming from hundreds of thousands of small business men."

The other principal objections to the industrial recovery program, he asserted, could be "enveloped in the broad charge of its interference with individual freedom in the conduct of business." He added:

"Without an orderly handling of the entire industrial problem, individual freedom of action meant the maximum of individual hardship and injury to the public welfare. Mills would be shut down. * * * Surplus stocks would be gradually sold at ruinous prices. Eventually, a new demand would arise.

"Cycle of Boom and Bust."

"Then again there would be a feverish rush to produce for a rising market. Consumers would pay back in scarcity prices what they might have gained in the period of surplus. Then inventories would rise until again the bottom would drop out of the market and the disheartening cycle of boom and bust would be again completed."

The answer, he maintained, was an individual who, while "a true lover of liberty," would not insist upon "a theoretical freedom to ruin himself and his fellow men by unrestrained self-seeking."

Richberg concluded that such "true lovers" would fit his title of "reconstructed individualists."

Missouri House Passes 2 Pct. Sales Tax Bill

By the Associated Press.

Jefferson City, Mo., March 27.—The administration 2 per cent sales tax bill was passed today by the House of Representatives without an emergency clause.

The vote was 86 to 57, or 10 more than the required majority of 76.

The measure now goes to the Senate, which is expected to substitute its own measure for it.

By the Associated Press.

Harrisburg, Pa., March 27.—Less than an hour after Gov. Earle made a personal plea for approval of his 22-point, $203,000,000 tax program, the State Senate today defeated the first of the proposed new revenue measures—a bill to increase the gasoline tax to 5 cents from 3 cents a gallon.

Inquiry to Expose 'Fixing' of Tickets street cars were favored. That isn't so.

"Motormen are arrested the same as anyone else. On the other hand, the car companies will deal more severely with a motorman who passes red lights than do the courts."

Pressed for more information about the "fixing" of tickets, Lamb said that only the sergeant in charge of the record office, the corporation counsel and himself had power to fix tickets.

Richberg Moves to Avert Walkout of 350,000 Miners

Hopkins and Tugwell to Do Spending Under New Set-up.

Workers. Francis J. Gorman, first vice president of the union, said that NRA authorization of a cut in cotton goods production had "set the stage" for another textile strike.

Gorman voiced his threat of a walkout while testifying before the House Military Affairs Committee for a bill which would require permission of the Secretary of War before Government equipment could be used by National Guards on strike duty.

He said the cut in cotton textile production would mean a 25 per cent cut in wages, reducing some workers to a wage as low as $8 a week.

Another NRA Worry.

The NRA was concerned at the same time with consequences of the decision of the Department of Justice to dismiss the Belcher case in the Supreme Court. This case would have tested not only the constitutionality of the NRA, but the validity of the lumber code, which was involved. The Lumber Code Authority asked that the lumber code be suspended.

Richberg replied that he believed the code authority had misunderstood the stand of the Justice Department and the NRA. He said dismissal of the case did not mean that NRA considered the code invalid.

"The withdrawal of the Belcher case by the Department of Justice is a bitter disappointment to the lumber and timber products industries," the statement of the Lumber Code Authority said. "The unavoidable inference is that the Department of Justice will no longer endeavor to enforce the lumber code, thus creating a difficult situation of discrimination between the lumber and other industries."

The statement said that the resident committee of the code authority telegraphed its administrative divisions throughout the country recommending that the Administration should suspend the code.

Richberg Denies Dodge.

Richberg denied that the NRA was attempting to dodge a showdown. He said, however, that he believed the system of code making and the benefits derived therefrom should be established before a decision is asked.

"I believe these things have now been established," he said, "and during the last six months I have very much wanted to see an adequate case before the Supreme Court."

Richberg said the decision to withdraw was reached by the Justice Department, and that he did not want it understood that the action resulted from the attitude of the NRA.

"The wisdom of some of the provisions of the lumber code was dubious," he said. "The question involved was one of whether you want to take as the first test a case in which there is a provision you don't want to defend."

He said the provision that was considered indefensible was that which gave the industry the power to curtail production without Government participation in the decision.

Code Revision Planned.

Richberg added that the Recovery Board had directed that steps be taken looking to revision and strengthening of the lumber code. In the meantime, he said the request that the code be suspended would not be granted. He said that he did not know of any way in which an entire code could be suspended.

The NRA, Richberg said, is ready to defend itself.

"I would like nothing better than to argue the Kentucky coal case in the Supreme Court," he said.

In this case it was decided by a Federal district court that coal mining is not an interstate function and therefore was not subject to Government regulation.

Richberg said that 22 NRA cases are now pending on appeal. He said, however, that there is little chance that any of them will reach the Supreme Court before June 16, when the present NRA law expires.

Meanwhile, the Senate Finance Committee continue its NRA investigation. It put into the record a telegram from Gen. Robert E. Wood, denying he had been offered a position as head of the NRA or that he would accept such an appointment if offered. Wood is chairman of a business advisory committee in connection with the new works program.

Defends Clothing Code.

M. D. Vincent, deputy NRA administrator, defended the clothing code authority against attacks made by Francis Curlee, a former witness, representing a minority organization in the clothing business.

Vincent said a survey of 50 of the largest clothing manufacturers showed that the 10 paying the lowest wages were represented by Curlee.

Testifying before the Senate Labor Committee, Henry I. Harriman, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, urged that the Wagner labor relations bill be held up pending a Supreme Court test of the validity of the collective-bargaining clause of the recovery act.

Harriman asked why unfair labor practices should be limited to the employer.

The employe, he said, needed protection from the "flying squadron" and the labor racketeer as well as from employer coercion.

Representatives of "inside" labor organizations from the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation, American Sheet & Tinplate Co., Carnegie Steel Co. and the Acme Steel Co. told the committee employes in those plants were content with their employe representation plans.

Bronx Chamber Pays Tribute to 'Jafsie'

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 27.—Dr. John F. Condon, the "Jafsie" who paid over the Lindbergh ransom, has been unanimously voted an honorary life membership in the Bronx Chamber of Commerce "for service he has rendered to our great borough," the chamber disclosed today.

Condon, testifying two months ago at the trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann for the murder of the Lindbergh baby, was asked where he lived.

"I was born in and I have always lived in the most beautiful borough of the world * * * the Bronx," he replied.

Byrd Aid Asked On Scenic Road

Secretary Ickes Calls on Senator to Speed Plan for New Parkway.

By the Associated Press.

Senator Byrd, of Virginia, was asked yesterday by Secretary Ickes to arrange a conference at an early date to work out the problems of obtaining a right of way for the scenic parkway in the Old Dominion.

Byrd immediately wired Gov. Peery asking the executive to come to Washington with Highway Commissioner H. G. Shirley for a meeting with Ickes.

Virginia has encountered some difficulty in obtaining scenic control of lands on either side of the 200-foot right of way which the Government has asked for the parkway. The parkway will link the Shenandoah Park in Virginia with the Great Smoky Mountains National Park in North Carolina and Tennessee.

In several instances, property owners have declined to deed over scenic control of their property adjacent to the right of way and State officials have expressed doubt that such right could be obtained by condemnation under Virginia law.

U. of M. Paper Scores Pearson On Defense of Faculty Losses

Warfare between President Raymond A. Pearson of the University of Maryland and the editorial board of The Diamondback, student newspaper, continued yesterday as the board sought to break down Dr. Pearson's contention that the loss of good professors was due to necessity for economy.

The Diamondback charged last week in a front-page editorial that Dr. Pearson was responsible for loss of the services of outsanding men in the teaching field. Dr. Pearson replied Monday that his appropriation from the State had made it impossible to keep the men.

"The only reference that the Diamondback made that could be connected to conditions during the past few years is the following: 'When on top of this glaring neglect of the teaching staff, additional salary cuts are proposed and the president of the university, in his private conference with the Governor, is unable to avert such reductions, the time has come for the students to speak in their own behalf.'"

This statement refers to cuts made in this year's appropriation. Among the outstanding professors who have left the university during the Pearson regime, the board named Drs. E. N. Gordon and M. Kharasch, of the chemistry department; Dr. E. E. Auchter, of the horticultural department; Dr. F. E. Lee, in sociology; Dr. A. G. McCall, professor of geology and soils; Dr. P. W. Zimmerman, in botany, and Dr. A. I. Andrews, in the history department.

Roosevelt to Rule New Funds For Relief, Capital Informed

But Indication Is That Hopkins and Tugwell Will Do Spending.

the McCarran provision all those making more than $5,000 "be imported from Russia." One Democrat replied, it is said, that such is not necessary, since "they already are from Russia."

Resentment Evidenced.

Some resentment was expressed privately by others on Capitol Hill over the role reserved for Undersecretary of Agriculture Tugwell in the works plans. To a lesser extent, there were murmurings against Hopkins. Earlier in the session, Secretary Ickes came under fire when he, too, was reported in line for promotion.

The elevation of Administrator Hopkins to the executive secretaryship of the works allotment board would give him a voice second only to the President's in allocating the fund. Already, as relief administrator, the pugnacious former social worker, at 44, has spent more money than any other man in the history of the world. His new job will give him even more millions to help disburse, in all directions.

Under present plans, the membership of the "allotment committee" will be composed of the heads of the agencies concerned with expenditure of the funds, such as Tugwell, for rural rehabilitation; Ickes, for slum clearance and housing; Robert M. Fechner, as director of the CCC, and Admiral Christian J. Peoples, in charge of public buildings. A number of others, such as Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, may be named.

Administrator Hopkins will continue in charge of directing the gradual transition from direct relief to work relief. The administrator yesterday was sunning himself at Miami, where he went for a few days' vacation after accompanying President Roosevelt to Jacksonville. He is reported to have plans in readiness for immediate action to give 3,500,000 people jobs as soon as Congress approves the works bill.

Another quasi-official group which will have an indirect part in allotting the $4,880,000,000 works fund will be an advisory committee set up by the Department of Commerce Business Advisory and Planning Council. Besides Gen. Robert E. Wood, president of Sears-Roebuck, who will be chairman, other members announced yesterday are Col. Robert G. Elbert, of New York, described as an authority on central banking and finance, and A. R. Glancy, former vice president of General Motors and now chairman of the Michigan State Planning Commission.

In preparation for his part in the new drive for recovery, Dr. Tugwell yesterday took command of a separate soil erosion unit set up in the Department of Agriculture by Secretary Wallace. Using the Soil Erosion Service, recently transferred from the Interior Department, as a base he ordered the merger April 1 of all erosion work handled by various bureaus of the Department of Agriculture. H. H. Bennett, now in charge of the Soil Erosion Service, was continued in control of the new unit.

Wide Program Mapped.

Officials are keenly concerned over the recurring dust storms in the Middle West, where almost a score have died of "dust pneumonia" caused by breathing in the swirling silt. Dr. Tugwell's new duties will be to direct the fight to prevent the storms, and to plot a large-range farm program involving the retirement of millions of sub-marginal acres—a program which eventually may succeed the AAA. In all, close to $1,000,000,000 is earmarked in the works bill for rural rehabilitation, rural electrification and prevention of soil erosion.

The Department of Agriculture declared that more than 50,000,000 acres have been ruined for crop production by soil erosion. Another 125,000,000 acres in crops have lost all topsoil, and about 100,000,000 acres more are rapidly approaching this condition. Damage from erosion alone was estimated at more than $400,000,000 a year.

To alleviate dust storms, the AAA is advocating the return of plowed acres to grass and the planting of trees and windbreaks. A proposal by Gov. Alf Landon, of Kansas, to throw up dirt barriers by the use of thousands of tractors also is being considered.

CCC to Continue.

Meanwhile, fear that the Civilian Conservation Corps would have to cease its operation Saturday, if the works bill is not passed by that time, were dissipated.

Orders went out to 1,640 CCC commanders from the War Department yesterday to continue the corps after Saturday whether or not the works bill has passed. Enlistment of new members, however, will be postponed until passage of the bill.

Should the bill fail of final enactment before Saturday, therefore, the 250,000 men and 33,000 supervisors now in the corps still will go on receiving food and supplies, but they will not get paid until Congress and the President complete action on the bill.

Don't Detour Detour On De Fishin' Tour

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Detour, Md., March 27.—The fish in Double Pipe Creek, near this thriving village, are doing their bit in a general business revival here by biting harder.

As more than 50 dairy workers are working night and day, and the bank reports its largest increase since it was organized, anglers hereabout say the fish are going for the bait with enthusiasm.

Large crowds attend public sales. They pay good prices in hard cash for horses, cows and farm implements.

Tourists, pausing at this hamlet, on the dividing line between Frederick and Carroll counties, are amazed at the hustle and bustle on the streets—the jingling of money in citizens' pockets, the proud look in the eyes of the cows and the long strings of glittering fish the fishermen bring to their wives' kitchens.

Palatable Dishes Can Be Prepared From Winter Supplies in Pantry

By Dorothea Duncan.

CERTAINLY YOU are not going to let spring come in and find your pantry in a topsy-turvy state. Let's get the pantry reorganized and put in order for the summer season.

There must be food tucked away on the pantry shelf which just won't be attractive later than two or three weeks hence. Cornmeal and other cereals that need cooking will spoil rapidly when the weather persists in staying warm. Anything of this sort should be taken out of dark corners while it is still good, and used to the best advantage before it spoils.

This doesn't mean that your family need be overstocked with hot cereals for breakfast, for right now they are turning their attention to crisp corn flakes and the puffed variety. There are many other attractive dishes that may be made from the breakfast cereals. That one hot dish at luncheon may have the cooked cereal basis, take spoon bread for example, or cornmeal muffins, or fried mush.

Perhaps some of you even have a bit of Christmas fruit cake tucked away in your pantry. You better bring this to light before heavy desserts go out altogether or its goodness will be wasted forever. With the addition of a good hot sauce it will be a welcome desert, but later it won't have the ghost of a chance.

Try Citron in Raisin Bread.

If you have any dried fruits, citrus peel, figs or dates stored in jars, it will be more convenient to use them up now, for when spring cleaning begins in earnest you will want to wash all these containers and have them ready for a brand-new supply of storable foods. Dates, figs or citrus peel are good in quick breads, and if you have never added a bit of citron to your raisin bread you should try it the next time you bake.

Macaroni and spaghetti can be served to advantage. In combination with sea food or cheese they make admirable Lenten dishes, but when hot weather comes these starchier foods will be taboo.

If your supply of canned fruit or vegetables is holding out too well, try to plan for its use in your menus. When fresh foods become abundant and are down to spring and summer prices it is time enough to use them exclusively in your menus.

Here are some recipes that may help make palatable dishes of the last winter stock on your pantry shelves.

Spoon Corn Bread.

2 cups water
1 cup white corn meal
1 cup milk
1 tablespoon shortening
1 teaspoon salt
2 eggs

Mix the water and corn meal and bring slowly to the boiling point. Cook five minutes. Add the milk, shortening, salt and well-beaten eggs. Beat thoroughly and bake in a well-greased pan for 25 minutes in a moderately hot oven (400 degrees F.). Serve from the same dish with a spoon.

Cheese-Macaroni Loaf.

1 teaspoon parsley
2 teaspoons chopped onion
1 tablespoon green pepper
2 tablespoons fat
½ cup grated cheese
1½ cups milk
1 egg
1 teaspoon salt
½ cup buttered bread crumbs

Cook macaroni in boiling salted water until tender. Saute the parsley, onion and pepper in fat until tender. Drain water from macaroni. Place a layer of this in a buttered baking dish, then a layer of peppers, onions and cheese. Repeat until dish is full. Pour over it the milk mixed with the egg. Cover with buttered crumbs, and brown in the oven (400 deegrees F.). Serve with tomato sauce.

Dorothea Duncan will be glad to help you with your culinary problems. Write to her, inclosing a stamped, addressed envelope, in care of The Washington Post.

CULBERTSON on BRIDGE

New One Notrump.

The new distributional one notrump bid—limited to hands of the 4-3-3-3 pattern—has many advantages other than the immediate distributional count it gives the responding hand.

The precise limitation of minimum and maximum honor strength is a guide to both responses and rebids that have heretofore been extremely vague.

One of these new bids is illustrated in today's hand on which by ordinary bidding methods it would be almost impossible to reach a game contract soundly.

North, Dealer
Both sides vulnerable

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1NT	Pass(1)
2♣(2)	Pass	3♣(3)	Pass(4)
3NT(5)	Pass	Pass	Dbl.(6)
Pass	Pass	Pass

1—Better than a double due to probability of a two-club response by partner.
2—Beginning of a sign-off.
3—Showing A Q x (or A K x) of partner's suit as well as all suits stopped and added values.
4—Too late for West to act.
5—North can expect six tricks in clubs; partner has shown 4 to 4½ honor-tricks, leaving at least 2½ outside of the club suit. Three side tricks will produce a notrump game.
6—West expects to reap the reward of his previous restraint.

The Play

West opened the diamond King, and after some thought East correctly dropped the Jack. West's double having marked him with all the outstanding strength. South took the first diamond to prepare for a possible end-play. Six club leads forced West to make five discards; this meant either unguarding the King of hearts or discarding a diamond.

West foresaw the situation and discarded as deceptively as possible; a low heart, a low spade, a low diamond, then the spade Queen and finally the Jack of hearts (retaining a small one) but South had an accurate count on his hand and could not be persuaded to play for the drop of the heart King. A spade was led and West took the Ace and three diamond tricks, but South won the last two tricks.

Note: Without the specialized "three club" bid it is almost impossible to arrive at game.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Please help me to make a decision. I have come to the crossroads and don't know which road to take. Both have advantages; likewise, disadvantages. I am a widow and a trained nurse. Having lost everything but my house, I have been rather successful taking patients in my home, making a specialty of invalids and elderly persons.

• • • •

At present, I have no patients nor prospects of any, but have opportunity of renting my place, which would give me a small income and freedom to try outside work, but in this day of specializing I am afraid I would not qualify as an up-to-date nurse.

• • • •

It has been 20 years since I was in training and I would be adrift. I have no close relatives with whom I could stay. I thought it might be possible to get work with the FERA, if you kindly tell me how to proceed. That is, if you advise this in preference to keeping my home on the chance of getting patients. It's a gamble, with so much competition; but appeals to me more, as I feel more competent in the nursing field and am loath to leave my pretty mountain home and have a timid shrinking from public life. Very truly yours,

ELIZABETH.

Chances of FERA Job.

DEAR ELIZABETH: So much depends upon qualifying circumstances with which I am not familiar in your case that I find it difficult to give a forthright opinion. In deciding whether or not to rent your home and try for a FERA job, the first consideration is: How much rent will you receive? Will it be sufficient to guarantee room and board elsewhere and a modest margin to meet transportation expenses and wardrobe upkeep? I don't believe it would be wise to let your home go for less than $75 a month. Room and board should be procurable for approximately $40 a month, and by wisely managing, you might get by nicely for a time on the balance of $35.

Good appearance is very essential for the job hunter, so shampoos, manicures, laundry, dry cleaning, shoe repairing and other details of grooming must be included in a tentative budget, in case you decide in favor of Federal job hunting.

I wonder, too, if the situation necessarily resolves itself into a choice between elusive convalescents, of whom there are none on the immediate horizon, and renting your home in order to seek a job. Have you thought of renting half of your house; one floor, say; or all of it with the exception of one room reserved for yourself; or of opening it to normally healthy persons seeking room or board, or both? Surely your experience in dealing with the idiosyncrasies—dietetic and temperamental—of convalescents, should make you a more than ordinarily agreeable hostess for paying guests. Your experience in budgeting and homemaking might be turned to excellent account in such a venture.

• • • •

Also, in the interim before making up your mind to either of the stated alternatives, why not advertise for a place as housekeeper, companion or practical nurse?

With regard to your chances of employment by the FERA, I must caution you against being overly optimistic. Civil service and patronage appointments are distributed by State apportionment, according to population, and it is generally conceded the Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia quotas are, for the most part, filled.

• • • •

However, I am advised that many nurses are employed by State organizations of the FERA, and it has been suggested that you contact the Virginia FERA office in Richmond. Cite your case to the State administrator of FERA funds, Richmond, Va., and acquaint yourself with the steps necessary to file formal application for the post desired.

Mrs. Frances Kelley, personnel director of the FERA's national headquarters, has offices in the Walker-Johnson Building at 1734 New York avenue, Washington, D. C., and you may contact her for further information. However, I believe you might effect a more logical entree via the Richmond route.

New England Women Characterized By High Intelligence, Mrs. Hamlin Says

It is generally agreed there is a New England type, a Southern type, a Western type and Eastern type of woman. But what are the differences in these types and why are they so unlike? This is the third in a series of articles dealing with sectional types.

By Frances Mangum.

IMAGINE a hypothetical Miss America. Suppose that each section of the country contributed qualities to make her a blend of North, South, East and West. New England would see that she had a high standard of morals and a leaning toward intellectual interests.

That is the opinion of Mrs. Simon Hamlin, wife of Representative Hamlin, of Maine.

"New England women themselves are strongly marked by these characteristics," declared Mrs. Hamlin. "They are taught from earliest childhood that life is a serious matter and they must wrestle with it to succeed. They are brought up to believe that mental training will make them best able to fend for themselves. Consequently, they are strong believers in the advantages to be derived from a well-rounded education."

Puritan Tradition Persists.

Mrs. Hamlin sat at a desk of her husband's office in the House Office Building. She was dressed in a conservative black frock which contrasted charmingly with her iron-gray, short bobbed hair, waved loosely back from her face.

"Here," she said, "you know the Puritains chiefly from history, but in New England it's just as though they were still among us, so strongly do people cling to the ideals they laid down. I daresay no section of the United States adheres more strongly to old traditions than we do there.

"That is why it makes it so easy to describe the New England type," she explained, "for I believe most emphatically there is a decided type.

Coldness Only an Appearance.

"You will find that the majority of women, and men, too, for that matter, are exact, circumspect and reserved, even to the point of seeming cold." Mrs. Hamlin smiled disarmingly. "But they aren't cold. Not a bit!" She explained that those who believe New Englanders have ice water in their veins would be greatly surprised to find how genuinely hospitable, fun-loving and merry they are beneath their chill coating.

"Outwardly, I grant you, New Englanders are hard to know," she said. "They seem to withdraw into themselves. But once they know you, and if they like you, they open up, and you'll find no people in the world more warm-hearted and genuinely sincere."

She admitted that New Englanders might be called analytical. "And that's because they want to know you, not what you have, or what you've done, but the real you," she said. "That's the way they judge you, by what you are yourself."

Underwood & Underwood.

The New England woman may seem cold and aloof but in reality she's fun-loving, merry and keenly interested in other people, says Mrs. Simon Hamlin, above, wife of Representative Hamlin, of Maine.

Mrs. Hamlin referred to another distinct characteristic of women from this part of the country. "It's versatility," she said. "New England women know how to adapt themselves to a variety of work. They are usually able to fulfill at least three or four kinds of positions and fill them equally well."

She drew a definite line between this ability to adapt themselves to many conditions and adaptability as applied to people.

"No, I can't say that adaptability in a social way is a strong point of New Englanders. They are too reserved, I suppose, and haven't sufficient blarney to pal with all types of people. It simply isn't in their make-up to be hail-fellow-well-met," she said with a laugh.

Tomorrow: Southern Woman.

What Today Means

"Aries."

IF MARCH 28 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:15 to 11:15 a. m., from 1:15 to 3:15 p. m. and from 7:15 to 9:15 p. m. The danger periods are from 6:15 to 8:15 a. m., from 3:15 to 5:15 p. m. and from 10:15 p. m. until midnight.

You may find it advantageous to be a better listener than a talker on this date. It might also be good judgment to remember that wise piece of advice, "not to count your chickens until they are hatched." The date will require systematic work to be done in every line of endeavor, whether it is of a domestic or business nature will make very little difference. In business it may pay to be tolerant regarding the opinions of others. Fluctuation in prices, in certain lines, may have an important bearing upon the amount of activity manifested. It will be wise to have verbal quotations, or promises, verified by written ones. Any form of entertainment, or social activity, should be helpful in promoting your popularity, providing nothing that would tend to create boisterousness is resorted to, as means of making a lively atmosphere.

Married and engaged couples, as well as those hoping to further their cause in seeking a matrimonial alliance, should guard against a situation that might be productive of a state of ennui. Listlessness may cause irritability. Activity may prove an excellent antidote.

If a woman and March 28 is your birthday, you are the type that will be much happier if you have something to occupy your thoughts and time. Restlessness is a tendency to be guarded against and is usually the result of having too active a brain not to keep it busy with worthwhile things.

Short story writing, musical compositions, painting, poetry, as well as interior decorating, may provide you with not only congenial, but profitable employment. Through social contacts you may become very popular. You are deeply appreciative of love and should be ideally happy married.

If a man and March 28 is your natal day, experience will be your greatest teacher and through this your success will ultimately come. Age can have no effect upon your results. Hope will light your way, regardless of the discouragements that may try to shut out its rays. Sustaining faith is all you require to carry you over life's rough spots. Lecturing, preaching, teaching, manufacturing, as well as selling, are mediums through which a satisfactory living may be secured. A home, with wife and children, should be a wonderful incentive for hard work.

Cherry Blooms Out, Blossom Fete Moved Up

Ceremonies Are Set for Wednesday; Mercury Hits 67 Here.

As the mercury climbed to 67 at 4 p. m., the cherry trees around the Tidal Basin seemed on the verge of blossoming, and time for the annual sunrise services greeting the Nipponese blooms was moved up to Wednesday. Originally the date of the ceremonies had been set for a week from tomorrow.

The Marine Band and the Evelyn Davis dancers will take part in the ceremonies.

The Japanese Ambassador, Hirosi Saito, and his official family have been invited to participate in the rites by the Greater National Capital Committee, sponsor of the services. Mrs. Elizabeth K. Peeples, Community Center Department director, also is cooperating in the program.

A few cherry trees blossomed yesterday, forerunners of a blush of beauty. They were reported in Georgetown lawns and gardens, in Meridian Hill Park, and elsewhere throughout the Capital.

Today, the Weather Bureau predicted, will see occasional rain and warm temperatures, and still more blossoms.

Defendant Cleared Of Arson-Murder

Virginia Court Refuses to Indict Philip Wise.

Murder and arson charges against Philip Jacob Wise, of Franconia, Va., were ignored yesterday by a Fairfax County grand jury after it had heard the State's contention that Wise started the fire which destroyed his house and burned his wife and two daughters to death. Wise was called before the court and discharged from custody. He had been held in bond of $5,000.

The fire at Wise's home occurred last October. In January he was arrested, and in March a grand jury indicted him on charges of murdering his wife, Nellie, and his two daughters, Beatrice and Frances. Wise's attorney attacked the validity of the jury and was upheld by the court, throwing out these indictments. A new jury was selected and the cases presented again.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—WITHOUT CALOMEL
And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul. Your skin often breaks out in blotches. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, entirely safe when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resist a substitute. 25c at drug stores. © 1931 C. M. Co.

Tax on Sales Stirs Protest In Baltimore

Retailers Charge Levy Will Be Ruinous to Business.

Half of Grocers Will Be Driven to Close Doors, Is Claim.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, March 27.—The proposed 1 per cent gross sales tax, offered by the State Senate as a compromise measure to raise relief revenue, today resulted in an outburst of opposition among retailers of Baltimore.

Harry W. Walker, executive secretary of the Independent Retail Grocers Association, sent his protest direct to Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor, who drew the bill, Walker said the message was too hot to print.

Terming the sales tax bill "an outrage," Walker said "it will drive 50 per cent of us out of business, for the grocery trade can't afford a 1 per cent tax."

A. L. Hetzler, president of the Retail Confectioners Association of Baltimore City, Inc., said "we are bitterly opposed to any kind of sales tax. It affects the poorer class of people and small merchants."

"Vicious Legislation."

T. P. Abbott, president of the Retail Merchants Association, called the tax "legislation of the most vicious kind" and "discriminatory as well." He said "they had such a tax in New York for a year, and it was finally repealed."

H. A. Crouthamel, former president of the Petroleum Retailers Association, of Baltimore, questioned the constitutionality of such a tax. He pointed out that "already there is a 4-cent-a-gallon State tax and a 1-cent-a-gallon Federal tax on gasolene."

Most of the retail officials complained that the tax, if passed, can not be passed on to the consumers.

The 1 per cent gross sales tax was described by Attorney General O'Conor as falling upon anything sold by a merchant in tangible form—anything, in brief, that the purchaser can touch.

No Exemptions.

There are no exemptions whatever for any specific commodities, he said. Only retail sales, however, are affected.

Receipts from sales of service are not taxable under the bill. There is no tax, for instance, on a haircut, a ride on the trolley or taxicab, a telephone call, movie admission or money taken in by a garage man for fixing a faulty carbureter.

Although no commodities are exempted, O'Conor explained the tax is paid on gross receipts only by a person who actually does the retail selling. A farmer for example selling a load of potatoes from door to door would pay the 1 per cent tax. If, however, he sold them to a market stall he would not pay the tax. The marketman who sold them actually at retail would pay the levy.

The attorney general said there was nothing in the bill to say whether the tax was to be passed on to the buyer.

An elaborate machinery is set up under the measure to police the sales tax. The comptroller's office will have charge of the collections, which will be paid monthly. On the tenth of each month every merchant will send in a report stating what his gross income from retail sales has been. He pays 1 per cent of this amount as tax.

Cost of Collecting Tax Estimated at $150,000

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., March 27.—State Comptroller William S. Gordy, jr., who would be charged with collecting the sales tax under provisions of the law, today estimated the cost at $150,000. He said it would cost from 2½ to 3 per cent of the tax to collect the revenue. A number of investigators and other help would be needed, he said. Provision for employment of such assistants is made by the bill.

ECW Artisans To Rehabilitate Historic Fort

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Grantsville, Md., March 27.—Within 60 days, an emergency conservation work camp will be established at Fort Necessity, on the National highway, about 20 miles west of here, with an enrollment of 200 men, mostly skilled in masonry and other constructive work.

This group will continue the landscaping for the State and national shrine on the site of George Washington's first battle. Meanwhile, RWD and ECW labor continues the job of planting, building, grading and road construction.

A lake covering four or five acres is to be built in the lowland, just east of the main gate, for boating in summer and ice skating in winter. A large swimming pool is to be constructed at another point. From the knoll south of the fort will be built a toboggan and ski jump.

Perennial plants, hemlock hedge, Japanese yew trees, azaleas, moss and trailing arbutus are being used in abundance, having been shipped from 15 States.

Plans for the park call for a Federal monument in front of the fort, facing the main highway. A principal beauty spot nearing completion is an elaborate rock garden. Labor for the work is provided through RWD funds, and materials by the Pennsylvania department of forests and waters.

A number of trees and plants for landscaping have been donated by individuals and patriotic, civic and fraternal groups. Outstanding among individual contributers is S. C. Witherspoon, of Oakmont, Pa. Evergreens representing all States along the Eastern coast as well as States through which Washington traveled already have been planted.

Senate Votes 4 Bank Bills In Maryland

FDIC Measures Are Pushed Ahead in Stormy Session.

Move to Boost Salary of Official Held Up After Fights.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., March 27.—Administration bank measures ran into exceedingly stormy weather in the Senate today as that body went through parliamentary gymnastics for more than an hour.

As a net result, 4 of the 15 measures were passed and sent to the House; one was set as a special order for tomorrow; several were passed on second reading and others were recommitted to committee.

The height of the parliamentary situation came when a set of amendments to one bill was sent forward to make changes in an entirely different measure. The reading clerk intoned the amendments and the Senate was about to vote on them when the mistake was discovered.

Salary Increase Fought.

The bank bill drawing most fire was one which would have increased the salary of the banking commissioner to $12,000 yearly. Senator Harold E. Cobourn (Democrat), Cecil, and Senator J. Allan Coad (Democrat), St. Marys, opposed that measure and the final result was that the bill was recommitted to the committee on judicial proceedings.

There was little or no attempt to explain the bills on the floor of the Senate. They were introduced by Senator J. David Baile (Republican), Carroll, minority floor leader of the Upper House, at request of the administration and were drawn by a committee named by the Governor to study the banking situation.

Four Measures Approved.

The four which were passed and sent to the House were:

To authorize the bank commissioner to accept an examination made by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in lieu of any examination made by State banking officials.

To make rights of the FDIC in closed State banks the same as those in closed national banks.

To authorize State banks to become members of the temporary Federal Deposit Insurance Fund or the FDIC.

To provide that five or more persons may form a trust company. The present law requires that 11 or more persons form a trust company.

Prior to becoming entangled in the bank bills, the Senate killed another administration measure. It would have provided for appointment of the clerk of the Court of Appeals by the court instead of his election by the people.

"Ceiling Zero," in the Minds of Aviators, Has Definite Aerial Significance

Title of Play Coming to the National Terse

Tells a Real Story to All Who Have Gone Up in the Ships That Ply Ether.

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

By Nelson B. Bell.

There is prevalent a bit of doubt, one is led to believe, concerning the title of "Ceiling Zero," the stage play scheduled to hold the boards, as the saying goes, at the National Theater next week, beginning Monday.

It seems that when there is no daylight, or nightlight or any other kind of light discernible betwixt earth and sky, account of because fog, heavy going or one thing or another, the boys who fly designate the unfortunate condition as "ceiling zero"—meaning that there is no sky at all, which hardly seems enough for the purposes of safe aviation.

It is upon this premise that former Lieut. Comdr. Frank Wead has woven the first of his stage shows that have come along to production.

Commander Wead is known as a flier who has cracked up many a plane without injury to himself, only to fall down three steps in his own home and hopelessly fracture his vertebrae. With the coming of the droll calamity. Commander Wead built his life all over again. He decided to become a writer, instead of one of the pioneer explorers of the uncharted air.

Has Written Scenarios.

There are many sign posts heralding his success as a scrivener for the celluloids. A goodly number of scenarios stand to his credit—"Dirigible," "The Flying Fleet," "Hell Divers," "Air Mail' and "Midshipman Jack" all are among his numerous contributions to the animation and distinction of the screen.

One suspects that from among the many flying pictures he has written Commander Read has evolved a stage plot that is newer to the traditional playhouse than it is to the gelatins. There seem to be evidences that the commander has played upon his knowledge of the flying game to contrive a novelty that has not yet found its way to the speaking stage.

There are signs of "Wings in the Dark," "Night Flight" and divers and sundry other camera subjects in the warp and woof of "Ceiling Zero."

That may not at all impede its success as a play calculated to arouse the most intense interest of the groundlings. From all reports I have heard from the scene of the New York rehearsals of the play, it is a full-fashioned, star-spangled wow! Not a dull moment, etc., ad lib.

The analogy of the air goes farther back than the mere writing of "Ceiling Zero." Implicated somewhere in the complicated process of publicization that has accompanied the projecture of this opus is one John Peter Toohey. John Peter Toohey, in case you haven't heard, is a high-powered writer of words who first came into national fame by writing for this estimable family journal the story of the Wright Brothers' first flight after Kitty-Hawk. That was the epochal take-off and landing that occasioned a governmental dispensation of $30,000 provided the Wrights could sail from Fort Myer to Alexandria, Va., and back again. They did. And they got the $30,000. And they got John Peter Toohey's seven-column story, too. And now John Peter Toohey comes to town as a mouthpiece for Lieut. Comdr. Read, who has had something to do with flying. Odd world, don't you think?

Speaking of this fellow Lampkin, as perhaps nobody was, this Friday, which will be something like day after tomorrow, Phil will celebrate the brightest event of his life, for on that day the young southpaw conductor, at Loew's Fox, will have completed a three-year span of duty at the ace F street house.

His anniversary will mark a new record to be hung up by a guest conductor.

Mr. Lampkin is a Westerner, having been born in San Francisco in 1905. At seven, his parents presented him with a cornet and that was the start of his musical career. Back in 1915 he played with a boys band at the San Francisco Exposition.

In 1920 he organized his first band and played many of the dances staged at the University of California by sororities and frats.

Next we find Mr. Lampkin at the Palace Hotel in San Francisco playing the first trumpet and until 1925 continued at that spot until he organized another band and played in and around San Francisco. His band was one of the first to broadcast over the radio.

Protege of Lyman's.

His first big break came when Abe Lyman brought him into the Club Alabam in Los Angeles and it was Lyman who started him in the master of ceremonies business, this time with Fanchon and Marco who were producing stage units.

In 1928 he broke up his band and left the Fanchon and Marco organization to join Publix and when the master of ceremonies vogue died, he went back to the straight musical profession.

Mr. Lampkin has played many of the largest theaters in America, including the Westlake and Paramount in Los Angeles; the Dome in Ocean Park, Calif.; the Alexander in Glendale, Calif.; the Warfield and Paramount in San Francisco; the Paramount in Portland, Oreg.; Paramount, Seattle; Fox in Detroit; Fox in Brooklyn, N. Y.; the Academy of Music, New York; Shea's in Buffalo, where he held the master of ceremonies record of 89 weeks.

Lampkin's ambition is to become an executive in the musical department of some large theater chain or at some motion picture studio.

His only other objective in life is that he continue to work until he is 55 years old and then retire to his farm in California.

Dickens Again.

The run of Dickens picturizations which have been so popular this year continues with the great Victorian's last and unfinished novel, "The Mystery of Edwin Drood," which comes to the Belasco on Thursday.

This novel has puzzled students and writers for many years, and several attempts have been made to reconstruct the supposed ending that was in the mind of Dickens when he left it unfinished at his death in 1870.

In England, they even went so far as to stage a mock trial, with G. K. Chesterton on the bench and George Bernard Shaw as chief kibitzer to determine the solution to the mysterious disappearance of Edwin Drood.

The picture, which opened in New York last week, is heartily recommended by the critics as both a piece of entertainment and of motion picture art. Featured are Claude Rains, Douglass Montgomery and Heather Angel, English star, who is well-known to American audiences for her part opposite Leslie Howard in "Berkeley Square."

It was a bit of a party that Manager Russell Conn, aided and abetted by Maurice Cafritz and all the other boys and girls in town who ever were associated with "show business," tossed at the Ambassador Hotel last Monday night. Any one who wasn't there—from the showman's point of view—just wasn't there and therefore wasn't anybody! It was a finely appointed affair and made remarkably complete provision for the large number who were present—which included a considerable number of us whose primary business on Monday night is to review the new show in town that night. In this case, it happened to be "Life Begins at 8:40," as good a revue as you are apt to stumble across in a month of green moons, or Sundays, or Saturdays, or something!

Signing-Off Note.

And I'm still afraid I'll be seeing you around, I shouldn't wonder

Let's hope not—for your sake

New French Fascinator Summons Secretaries

By "fascinator" we do not mean one of those ancient shoulder wraps, but that eminent young fellow of the cinema, Mons. Maurice Chevalier, who seems to be happier than he has been in years in "Folies Bergere," the chief screen feature of the week at Loew's Fox Theater. These gay young secretaries, by the way, are not the least of the film's appeal to certain of the risibilities. Look them over. One yearns to be an executive!

Loudoun Fixes Tax Rate at $1, 20-Cent Boost

Tentative Levy Would Bring $146,000 for Schools, County.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Leesburg, Va., March 27.—A tax levy of $1 on the $100 assessed valuation of property tentatively was fixed by the Loudoun County Board of Supervisors today. This is an increase of 20 cents over last year. Additional rates in several districts in the county tentatively were continued as follows: Lovettsville School rate, 20 cents; Mercer, 5 cents; Mount Gilead, 10 cents, and Town of Leesburg School District, 40 cents.

This tentative $1 rate is on an estimated assessment of $14,600,000, making $146,000 for school and county expenditures. Of this amount $100,000 goes to the schools and $46,000 for general county expenses. The county's expenses were approximately $53,000 last year.

The school board asked for an appropriation of $112,252, and a number of citizens spoke today in favor of this amount. This is approximately $30,000 more than schools received last year. This extra amount would take care of an increase in the teachers' salaries of about $12,000 and $10,000 in excess of last year's expenses for transportation, vocational teachers, fuel, repairs, supplies and other incidentals.

An additional $200 for home demonstration work was tentatively appropriated. No appropriation for the county nurse was included in the budget.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Hollywood, March 27.

MARY ELLIS, while on the set making "Paris In Spring," was not the temperamental ball of fire which Joseph Reed discovered her to be when he produced "Children of Darkness."

She and Director Milestone got along fine; she did as she was instructed without any outbursts, without throwing the scenario to the floor, without telling every one how to make the picture her way. Miss Ellis, however, was no push-over. She is a mild fire, which can be set ablaze. While she was making her first flicker, "All the King's Horses," she was dissatisfied. She didn't care for the story and she didn't care for her leading man, Carl Brisson. She made no secret of it.

She wanted to record songs her way and to sing them in her fashion. She didn't always want to be told off. With Director Milestone it was a different story. They argued, as any star and director might do, when the flicker started. By the second week of the filming they were the best of friends. When she completed her work in "Paris In Spring," Mary Ellis said: "You can tell every one that Milestone is the greatest director I ever worked for. I would like to make every picture with him. There would be no trouble."

She is New York born and has reached that age where she wishes to say she's 30 and dismiss it with that. She was born on June 15, 1901, at 7 o'clock in the morning. She had been expected to be a boy.

* * * *

IT was at the age of 14 that she enrolled in the life class at an art school. At 17 she went to the Conservatory Training Academy. Her nickname was La Vierge Marie.

She really started as a dramatic actress in David Belasco's presentation of "The Merchant of Venice." She sang at the Metropolitan Opera House. She sang with Enrico Caruso in his last performance in New York. She was the girl in the production of "The Blue Bird," which was directed by Maurice Maeterlinck. She became a Broadway favorite in "Rose Marie," which she states Arthur Hammerstein ordered written especially for her.

She is 5 feet 4 inches tall with her shoes on, and weighs 125 pounds with her clothes, not too many of them, on. She has brown hair and green-gray eyes.

She is married to Basil Sidney, the play actor, although they are not working at it. Theirs was to be a partnership in the theater and in love. First they parted professionally, then socially.

She never practices singing—which is a great help to her neighbors. She insists that if she couldn't sing as naturally as she talks she wouldn't sing at all.

She loves cold water, only in the sea, and goes surf swimming. She detests swimming pools. She adores hot baths, and always tries to take two of them a day. Her favorite outdoor sport is horseback riding. She never wears pants, even when horseback riding. She says she once wore a pair of riding britches and her horse kicked her.

She uses the ordinary make-up cosmetics for street wear, but refrains from looking at herself in the mirror as much as possible. She says she gets discouraged when she looks at her face.

* * * *

SHE can't eat the things she really likes, for she must watch her diet. After a couple of good meals she has to go on a fruit juice diet. She can't play bridge, but she plays a good man's game of poker.

She hates pajamas and wear a very feminine nightgown while sleeping. She sleeps without a pillow, and if she gets cold during the night she puts the pillow on her feet. This warms her. She always has her breakfast in bed.

She studies languages. She can speak French, German and Italian, besides English and American. She is now studying Russian and expects to be able to speak it perfectly in another year.

She likes to sketch, and is a fair artist. She reads the latest fiction, collects first editions, and Somerset Maugham is her favorite author. Regardless of the temperament stories about her, she insists that she hasn't a temper.

Hollywood has given her a new front tooth. The camera insisted upon this.

She hasn't any favorite type of man, and, therefore, is not limited to a one-style male. The man who appeals to her most is a man who possesses many of the qualities that she does. Above all, she states, she looks for humor and kindness in a man.

Gov. Peery Will Receive Confederate Flag Gift

Richmond, Va., March 27 (AP).—A fragment of a Confederate flag reported to have been the war banner which floated above the Capitol here until Federal troops occupied the city on April 3, 1865, is being formally returned to Virginia April 3 by Alfred N. Phillips, jr., Mayor of Stamford, Conn., and will be received by Gov. Peery in formal exercises at the Capitol April 3.

D. C. Woman's Estate Exceeds $200,000 Mark

Personal and Real Property Comprise Fortune of Mrs. H. S. Chase.

Mrs. Helen Stirling Chase, widow of Stephen M. Chase, left property valued in excess of $200,000, it was shown in the District Supreme Court yesterday when a petition asking the appointment of the Lincoln National Bank as collector of the estate was filed.

The petition revealed that Mrs. Chase had personal property estimated to be worth $189,834 and "valuable real estate" located in the District and Frederick, Md., the value of which was not given. Attorney George Francis Williams filed the paper.

In a second will filed yesterday letters of administration were sought by George J. Mueller, son of the late Jacob C. Mueller, who died January 15, leaving no will. The petition revealed the father left real estate valued at $95,934. Attorney George B. Elcan represented the son.

Personal property worth $30,000 and real estate valued at $14,438 was left by Lieut. Comdr. Waldemar D. Rose, who died recently, a petition for probate of his will showed. Attorney Robert F. Cogswell represented the estate.

$25,000 Is Granted To Peery Advisers

Council Must Use Fund in Legislative Research.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., March 27.—"In the interest of better government" the Spelman Fund, one of the Rockefeller philanthrophies, has granted $25,000 to Virginia to be used by the advisory legislative council appointed yesterday, Gov. Peery announced today.

The fund will more than double the facilities of the State research and drafting departments, the Governor said. The grant was made only on condition that it be used for "legislative research."

The Spelman organization previously has granted $33,500 to the State planning commission and $40,000 to the League of Virginia Municipalities. The latter fund is to be spent during five years; the other two grants are expected to be expended in 18 months.

Hotel Register Raises New Lincoln Puzzle

By the Associated Press.

Fredericksburg, Va., March 27.—Where was the "Hon. A. Lincoln" on January 22, 1861?

Local historians have compared the signature found in an old hotel register with an authentic signature of the President on a Civil War prison pass and have pronounced the writing identical. They still haven't discovered why Lincoln, if the register was signed by him, was in Fredericksburg more than a month before his inauguration.

Nats Fill Bases in Ninth, Score Run to Trim Kansas City, 3-2

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich

Biloxi, Miss., March 27.

A BASEBALL writer's day at Biloxi, if the truth be known: Izzat that damn phone ringing? It is. One sleep-ridden arm disengages itself from the bed covers and reaches for the vicinity of the night table. It succeeds in sweeping the phone, the table lamp and ten pounds of assorted literature onto the floor. Guess he'd better pick it up. Wonders if he can make it without getting out of bed. He can't. Foiled, just looks at the phone. Decides he'd better answer it anyway, and drags himself out. Hello, hello. No answer. Slams the receiver hook up and down a half-dozen times. Hello, hello. No answer. Well, they know what they can do with the blankety-blank thing, and bounces back into bed.

POVICH.

As his head hits the pillow, there it goes again, loud enough to be heard across the gulf. Realizes that the phone is still in the middle of the floor and decides to ignore it. But it keeps ringing. Oh, well, and with a sigh of combined disgust and resignation, hops out to answer it.

"Good morning, it's 9 o'clock," says somebody down at the hotel desk, who has probably been up for hours drinking in the sunshine and telling you what a great thing it is to get up early in the morning.

"Thank you, so-o-o much," he answers, and flops back to bed. Wonders how he feels this morning. Decides he feels all right, but could use some more sleep. Wonders if he can make it down to the dining room for breakfast before it closes at 9:30. Falls asleep wondering and by the grace of Providence awakens at 9:29. Grabs the phone and gets under the wire by ordering breakfast sent up.

LANDS in the hotel lobby at 10:30 just as the bus is ready to leave for the ball park with the players. Debates whether he will watch the practice this morning or finish that story in Satevepost. Gets a pang of conscience and decides to watch the practice. Misses the bus and walks the mile to the ball park, cursing the FERA people who improved the road with oyster shells laid ankle deep.

Makes a mental note to wire the office for more expense money. Reaches the ball park, played out, and flops on Trainer Mike Martin's rubbing table until the odor of liniment finally overcomes his fatigue and sends him out to the ball field for air. Ambles up to Bucky Harris standing behind the batting cage and helps him look over the stuff of the rookie pitchers. Hears Heinie Manush bawl the rookies out for not getting 'em over the plate, and then, when they do, sees Heinie slam 'em all for triples.

Admires Nick Altrock's foolishness on first base and decides there isn't another man in baseball who can do the same stuff. Sidles over to Clark Griffith, who is looking over the rookie pitchers in the bullpen, and hears Griff tell 'em like he has been telling 'em for 30 years, to finish their stride on the flat of their foot instead of on the toe or on the ball of the foot, because it helps the control. Wonders if Griff ever gets tired of talking about the right "action" in a pitcher. Everybody knows some of the best pitchers in the league have screwy "action."

DECIDES to get back to the hotel and do today's story for the 9 p. m. edition before lunch so the afternoon will be free. Wonders what today's story is. Oh, well, he'll get an idea somewhere somehow. Ends up back in the hotel looking around for something interesting to write about.

Sees Heinie Manush sitting in the lobby. Gets a black look from Manush because of writing the other day that Manush had a poor throwing arm. Something that everybody in the league has known for years. Decides to interview Monte Weaver. It becomes a monologue by himself, and he guesses he'll try somebody else. Glances around the lobby and notes Bob Burke, Cliff Bolton, Fred Schulte and Ossie Bluege punishing the upholstery and figures rightly that there is not a story in a carload of 'em. Why do ball players have such dead pans?

Gets to thinking of that missed putt on the eighteenth yesterday and wonders if he can break 100 this afternoon. He wonders until he finds himself teeing off on the first tee and deciding to let the story go until 6 o'clock. Discovers that he could have broken 100 if he hadn't 3-putted the eighth, ninth, fifteenth and sixteenth and hit that tree on the eighteenth.

The burning question now is whether to go to work before dinner or after dinner. A look at the clock decides in favor of the latter. He still has an hour and a half to get his stuff down to the telegraph office. He eats, rueing his decision when a waiter, moving with all the speed of a rheumatic snail, travels back and forth to the kitchen as if it were the last mile. Wolfing his desert, he hustles up to his room, gets out his trusty portable and stares at the keys the while bursting an ear drum in an effort to think of a topic. Alas, there was no topic. The above is the result.

Brown Is Out on Limb Again; Names Braddock as No. 1 Rival

By Paul Gallico

A Special Correspondent.

CHICAGO, March 27.—Well, I knew it would happen. I could see it in Bill Brown's eye the night of the Lasky-Braddock fight. Here I am out of town with the New York Golden Gloves Team, preparing to fight Chicago in the most desperate long-odds tourney of the entire series of New York-Chicago Golden Gloves intercity matches, and Commissioner Brown, of the New York Athletic Commission, goes out on a limb again.

He won't go out on a limb when I am around town to exercise a restraining and soothing influence again. But just as soon as he knows I am leaving that old "limb fever" comes over him again, and out he crawls, 'way, way to the end.

I note that this time he has company, the same being Gen. Phelan, chairman, and the rest of the boxing commission. This is better than being out on the end of a limb all by yourself, as I have been many a time and can, therefore, speak from experience. But nevertheless, it is giving into an old weakness.

This time, as I say, I could see in his eye he is out on the limb for a young man by the name of James J. Braddock. He has influenced the commission to name Braddock No. 1 challenger for the title of Max Baer.

Now, inasmuch as the Madison Square Garden Corporation of New York has signed and sealed the heavyweight championship bout between Max Schmeling, of Germany, and Max Baer, this nomination of the New York State Athletic Commission seems a little gratuitous. I do not know what Madison Square Garden will do about it.

I only know what I would do, and what Tex Rickard would have done, because he did it on two occasions. He moved his prize fight away from the jurisdiction of the New York State Commission. This cost New York State thousands of dollars in taxes and employment for citizens of the State.

The German amateurs, when they came to Chicago to fight the Chicago Golden Glovers, drew a record crowd. A Baer-Schmeling fight in Chicago would certainly draw 70,000 or 80,000 persons. If I were Col. Reid Kilpatrick, Garden head, I should begin to make arrangements to move at once.

In this case I seem to see justice as entirely with the Garden corporation. It is a stock-selling, money-making concern, and the State does not guarantee its losses to its stockholders. It has a legitimate money-making enterprise, carefully nursed along, in the Baer-Schmeling fight.

Schmeling is a decent young fellow, a drawing card, and in his last two fights has turned in conclusive performances. Neither of his opponents has managed to stay 10 rounds with him. One of them went to a hospital. The Garden figures to make a profit on matching Schmeling with Baer.

Now, Braddock, in his fight with Lasky, showed nothing that would awrrant his being named as No. 1 challenger for Baer's title. Schmeling would have no difficulty in disposing of Braddock, and, had Braddock knocked Lasky out or stopped him, I would have been the first to suggest that he do so.

Teams Pound 6 Hits Each In Duel

A Staff Correspondent.

BILOXI, Miss., March 27.—The pitching of a pair of Washington southpaws, Earl Whitehill and Leon Pettit, kept the Blues—the Kansas City Blues—away from home plate after the first inning this afternoon and the Nats ended up with a 3-2 victory.

The American Association club, which journeyed over from Mobile, came in like lions, scoring two runs in the first inning, but thereafter they went out like lambs as Whitehill and Pettit pitched shut-out ball.

It was a pitchers' duel, as the box score, which shows six hits for each club, indicates, but the Nats had the ball game literally forced upon them in the ninth inning when three bases on balls issued by a chap named Olds was followed by a long fly to center field by Heinie Manush. Red Kress scored from third with the winning run in a half canter.

Whitehill Impressive.

Whitehill manifested that he will be ready for the opening-game assignment on April 16 by his impressive six-inning turn on the mound. After a shaky first inning, in which he permitted two hits through the infield after two were out, hit one batter and walked another to force over the first run, he was invincible.

The grizzled Pettit did nothing to alter the belief that he is headed for a regular job on the Nats' staff. Pitching the last three innings, he took the cue from Whitehill, held the Blues runless and permitted two singles, as scattered as skyscrapers in the Sahara.

As far as the Nats' hitting was concerned, there is very little news to report. The dog is still biting the man down here. Johnny Stone, who always leads the Washington hitters in the spring games, made three safeties today for exactly half the Nats' total. He was robbed of a fourth.

If coming events do, indeed, cast their shadows, then Red Kress is fated to begin the season as the Nats' regular shortstop in preference of Lyn Lary. Jake Powell will be the club's lead-off man at bat. Kress played a sensational game in the field, made a rousing hit and scored the Nats' winning run. All Powell did outside of covering acres in center field was to coax four straight walks from the three Kansas City pitchers.

Singles Set Staged.

A pair of singles through the infield by Kreevich and Keaton after two were out set the stage for the Blues' two runs in the first inning. Whitehill then filled the bases by hitting Rollings and forced over a run with four straight balls to Salik. The Blues' second run was the gift of, of all people, Ossie Bluege, who made a wild throw to first on Schulte's grounder.

By a Staff Correspondent.

BILOXI, Miss., March 27.—Numbers for their gaudy 1935 uniforms, which will literally make the Nats' the most colorful team in baseball next season, were issued to the Washington ball players today.

Ossie Bluege, despite his status as a utility man, was issued his favorite No. 7 as a personal favor. It was regarded as significant, though, that Red Kress, who appears to be edging Lyn Lary out of the regular shortstop post, was given No. 26, while Lary was issued No. 28. Other numbers issued were:

1, Coach Nick Altrock; 2, Capt. Buddy Myer; 3, Heinie Manush; 4, Johnny Stone; 5, Cecil Travis; 6, Joe Kuhel; 8, Cliff Bolton; 9, Sammy Holbrook; 10, Jack Redmond; 11, Earl Whitehill; 12, Bob Burke; 14, Walter Stewart; 15, Al Thomas; 16, Monte Weaver; 17, Jack Russell; 18, Irving Hadley; 19, Ed Linke; 20, Leon Pettit; 21, Syd Cohen; 22, Henry Coppola; 23, Fred Schulte; 24, Jake Powell; 25, Freddie Singleton; 29, Coach Johnny Kerr; 35, Manager Bucky Harris.

As usual, the fateful No. 13 was omitted from the list. The only player ever to wear the number with a Washington team was Art Shires. When he reported with the Nats, Owner Clark Griffith asked the irrepressible Shires if he had the nerve to wear No. 13.

"BUMP" HADLEY.

Hadley Is Sent To 'Nooga to Be Treated

Will Rejoin Nats Here on April 9; His Position Declared Vacant.

By a Staff Correspondent.

BILOXI, Miss., March 27.—Grave concern over the sore arm of Pitcher Bump Hadley was indicated today by Bucky Harris, Washington manager, when he ordered the veteran right-hander to Chattanooga for a series of treatments.

As a result of the persistent soreness in his arm and shoulder, Hadley will forego the barnstorming trip North with the Nats, rejoining the team in Washington on April 9.

At Chattanooga he will be under the ministrations of Lee Jensen, trainer of the Washington Club's baseball farm, who is famed for the effectiveness of his treatments to ailing arms.

Position Is Vacant.

Manager Harris already has announced that Hadley's position as one of the "big four" of the Nats' pitching staff is now vacant and that another of the Washington pitchers will be promoted to a regular role. His successor will be chosen from among Walter Stewart, Ed Linke, Leon Pettit and Thomas. Harris will rotate one of the group with Earl Whitehill, Monte Weaver and Bobby Burke.

The alarm caused by Hadley's condition is more than mild among the Nats' bosses. The rugged right-hander, obtained from the Browns last winter, was regarded as the most valuable addition to the faltering Washington pitching staff. He was expected to be the most active of the Nats' hurlers in view of his reputation as a work horse.

Third Baseman Cecil Travis turned up today with a serious case of homesickness and was given permission by Harris to visit his home near Atlanta. He will rejoin the club in Birmingham on Friday.

American Derby Booked June 22

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 27.—The twenty-seventh American Derby will be run at Washington Park on June 22 with an added purse of $25,000, President John P. Harding, of the Washington Park Jockey Club, announced today. The outstanding 3-year olds of American turf are expected to enter the race over a mile and a quarter.

Six other stakes, none of which are for purses less than $5,000 added, will be on the program arranged by the new group controlling Washington Park. The minimum purse to be offered during the meeting, which will run from May 25 to June 29, will be $1,000.

Nominations for the American Derby close on May 1. The nominating fee has been set at $25, with the starting fee at $500.

Harris' Club Seen Threat This Year

Cronin's Loss Is Felt; Hurling Staff Offers Biggest Problem.

By Alan Gould.

Associated Press Sports Editor.

BILOXI, Miss., March 27.—The Senators have a choice of opportunities in the forthcoming American League pennant race.

Washington's 1933 champions cracked up last season like a box of peanut brittle, dropping seven notches down the standing, where only the persistent back-pedaling of the White Sox kept them from tumbling into the cellar. It would be asking too much of the Senators to duplicate the feats of the 1926 Yankees, rebuilt so effectively by the late Miller Huggins that they rose from seventh place to the top and stayed there for another three-year stretch, but Washington should be a first-division factor again.

Pitching Corps Big Gamble.

The Senators figure to shake off the injury jinx that riddled the batting order from top to bottom during 1934, but it's another story when it comes to filling the big shoes of Joseph Edward Cronin at shortstop or making an erratic pitching staff perform winning tricks. Capable as he is, Stanley Raymond (Bucky) Harris, back in the Capital as manager after six years in Detroit and Boston, is no magician. Bucky is optimistic naturally, but he knows his pitching corps is a big gamble and by no means up to pennant-winning caliber, short of some miraculous comebacks.

The only notable addition to the staff that fell apart last year is Irving (Bump) Hadley, former wild man of the St. Louis Browns, but a highly effective right-hander when he is right. Harris looks for the change of scenery and prospects to make Hadley a consistent winner. Bucky also has instilled fresh confidence in Lefty Bob Burke by giving him an unconditional starting assignment and looks for young Ed Linke, a right-hander, to help fill one of several possible gaps.

BRADENTON, Fla., March 27.—History repeated itself today as the Detroit Tigers, behind the pitching of Tommy Bridges, lambasted the Dean family for 12 hits and beat the St. Louis Cardinals, 13 to 8.

It was Bridges who pitched Detroit to victory over Dizzy in the fifth game of the 1934 World Series. Both the Dean brothers were ineffective today against the team they vanquished last fall.

Pensacola, Fla., March 27 (AP).—With Fred Fitzsimmons, Leon Chagnon and Al Smith combining to pitch shut-out ball, the New York Giants turned back the Cleveland Indians, 2 to 0, today to end a three-game losing streak.

Each team got six hits, but the Giants made the most of their blows as Phil Weintraub pounded out two triples and knocked in the second of the New Yorkers' runs in the seventh inning.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 27.—After going hitless for four previous games and the first three times at bat today, Lou Gehrig finally came through with a double as the New York Yankees defeated the House of David, 6 to 1, in an exhibition game. The double was Larrapin' Lou's third safe blow in 37 trips to the plate this spring.

PINEHURST, N. C., March 27.—Paul Runyan went rollicking around the Pinehurst No. 2 course in the rain today for a 65 and spread-eagled the field for the first round of the North and South open golf tournament.

Only two others among the 100 entries—Felix Serafin, Scranton, Pa., and Ray Mangrum, Los Angeles, who scored 68s—could break 70.

Byron Nelson, Texarkana, Tex.; Willie Macfarlane, Tuckahoe, N. Y., and Craig Wood, Deal, N. J., scored 70s, while Harry Cooper, Chicago; Joe Ezar, Waco, Tex., and Clarence Clark, Bloomfield, N. J., were bracketed at 71.

Uses Woods on Seconds.

He was forced to use a wood for his second shot on many of the longer par fours, but he banged them up to the hole and canned putts with unerring accuracy to string six birdies on his card, never going over par.

Brown Looms As Opponent For Baer

Gets No-Decision Fight if He Fares Well With Joe Louis.

District, Detroit Lads End Hard Work for Bout Tomorrow.

By Bill McCormick.

A Staff Correspondent.

DETROIT, Mich., March 27.—Natie Brown, the Washington heavyweight who has been bowing and scraping in the outer circle of ring royalty for more than a year, will be permitted to joust with King Max Baer himself—if he conducts himself satisfactorily against Joe Louis, the Black Knight of Detroit, in their ten-round battle here Friday night.

Promoters Jim Mullen and Nate Lewis, who are promoting the box-fighting contest between Brown and the Black Diamond, today agreed with Billy McCarney, Natie's manager, that the Jewish lad from Washington would be signed for a ten-round no-decision bout against the champion in Chicago on April 12, if he made a good showing. By a good showing, explained Nate Lewis, spokesman for the Chicago-Detroit promoting firm, was not necessarily meant a win or draw for Brown, but an action-filled battle which was not too one-sided.

Would Draw $50,000.

"If Brown beats Louis, and many think he will," Nate explained, "a bout between him and the champion will draw no less than $50,000 in Chicago. If he draws with the colored lad here, the gate will be not much less, and if he stays on his feet and battles throughout, the bout still is a good attraction."

Brown has an offer to fight Jack Peterson, the British heavyweight, in the Wembley Stadium on April 29. The bout can not now be made for that date, but will be made for

"High Grade" is the trade name for Ten Cent Cigars

It is significant that the retail cigar dealer classifies cigars that sell for ten cents and up as "High Grade." Why does he do this?

Captain Argo Carries 118 Pounds to Easy Victory at Tropical

Wild Pigeon 5 Lengths Behind

Hirsch Star Is Second Winner of Day for Jockey Wright.

By the Associated Press.

TROPICAL PARK, Fla., March 27.—Captain Argo, sterling sprinter in the red and yellow silks of Miss Mary Hirsch, the young lady who conditions her own horses, ran by far the fastest 6 furlongs of the meeting in galloping off with the Zephyr Purse here today.

The 4-year-old gelded son of Happy Argo—Knot picked up 118 pounds and carried it as if it were a feather, covering the distance in 1:10 4-5 over the sluggish racing strip. The Silver Stock Farm's Wild Pigeon dropped into the place, five lengths behind and a length and a half before E. McGehee's Headin Home.

Wayne Wright rode the Captain, gaining his second straight score and his twenty-second at the meeting. The Hirsch representative was a $4.10 choice.

The Zephyr was a class B graded handicap and attracted a half-dozen to the post. There was little to the running, for Wright broke Captain Argo in his stride and nothing ever could get close. The Captain, at one time, was nearly ten lengths in front. Headin Home tired trying to keep up with the terrific pace and gave way to Wild Pigeon in the last furlong. Dokas failed to justify considerable late support.

Alger Wins Another.

The colors of Fred M. Alger, jr., carried to three victories on the previous day, again flashed home in front when Nedvive, another of those purchased from W. S. Kilmer, won the juvenile dash by two lengths. The daughter of Neddie—Sun Vive outran her field from the break, covering the half mile in 0:47 4-5 to pay $11.20. Gentle Tryst, a newcomer, took the place from the slow starting Evening Hour. Armful, favorite under Wright, never could get up.

WATERSET broke good, followed pace to middle of turn, where she assumed lead, but stopped and appeared beaten at the furlong pole, then came again and just lasted to win. SUN CLOISTER, under hard urging, closed gamely. ST. OMER appeared to have the race well in hand in stretch, but stopped badly. MORNING FAIR, mean at the gate, was swerving badly at finish. VESTED POWER was outrun.

SAND RUNNER, well handled, was sent to the front going into first turn, displayed good speed, saved ground, and held on well. MAREVE followed pace closely from the start and finished with a rush. IDLE FLIRT broke from the outside, was taken wide going into first turn, made up ground very fast, and ran a good race. HIGH SOCKS beat a lot of tired horses.

THIRD RACE—Four furlongs. Purse, $700. For 2-year-old maiden fillies. Start good. Won easily; place, same. Went to post at 3:34½. Off at 3:37. Winner, F. M. Alger, jr.'s b. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—NEDVIVE, $11.20, $5.90, $4.50; GENTLE TRYST, $8.30, $5.30; EVENING HOUR, $2.60.

NEDVIVE, a rapid breaker, was rushed into lead and, rated along, drew away easily in final furlong. GENTLE TRYST broke fast, was hustled along from the start, and showed a smart effort. EVENING HOUR broke very slow, worked her way up, and finished with a rush under weak handling. LITTLE NYMPH broke well, but was crowded back, recovered, and finished gamely. ARMFUL, well up, had no mishap.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800. Graded handicap, class C. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won handily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:00. Off at 4:11½. Winner, J. E. Two-dollar mutuels paid—QUICKLY, $5.10, $3.20, $2.30; ABNER, $4.30, $2.80; VOLTA MAID, $2.40.

QUICKLY was much the best. She broke on her toes, was sent right to the front, saved ground, and won nicely in hand. ABNER, away well, followed pace closely, and made a game effort. VOLTA MAID was full in the middle of the track and finished fast. BROAD MEADOWS ran a greatly improved race. GUAPITO ran a smart race under very poor handling. RIDGE MOR was never a contender.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. The Zephyr. Graded handicap, class B. Purse, $1,000. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won galloping; place, driving. Went to post at 4:43. Off at 4:46. CAPTAIN ARGO is in great form. He handled his weight well, rushed into lead and, rated along to stretch, drew away and was only galloping at end. WILD PIGEON came outrun to the middle of the turn, was then taken to inside and finished with a rush. HEADIN HOME moved up with a determined bid entering stretch, but weakened badly in last sixteenth. DOKAS broke well, but dropped back to last place, circled field, and finished fast. MOISSON showed a flash of speed in middle quarter. HANK MACTAVISH showed good early speed.

SIXTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $700. Claiming price, $1,050. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:19. Off at 5:21. Winner, Mrs. G. Spitzer's br. f. THE AENEAD was never a factor.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—RARE BEN, $11.50, $4.30, $3.90; LITTLE ARGO, $2.80, $2.40; POLLY RITA, $3.80.

RARE BEN, going in much improved form, rushed into lead and, rated along, stood long drive gamely. LITTLE ARGO, was much the best, but was the victim of a timid and incompetent ride. POLLY RITA showed good early speed. BROKEN UP was blocked several times, but finally got through, and finished on inside. SOCK DOLOGER ran a fair race.

Investigation Rallies to Eliminate Olmstead Grill in A. A. U. Semifinals

Sleuths Win Thriller by 34 to 29

Boys' Club Cops Title; Sholl's to Engage Soldiers Tonight.

EXPERIENCE overcame gameness and grit last night as Bureau of Investigation's veteran and versatile team of former college stars subdued Olmsted Grill, 34 to 29, in a blood-tingling contest to enter the finals of the unlimited division of the District A. A. U. Tournament at Tech High's gym.

Investigation, carrying out the pretournament predictions, earned the right to meet the winner of tonight's feature battle between Sholl's, 1932-33 champions, and Company F, of Hyattsville.

The unlimited finals will be played Saturday night when the tournament will come to a grand climax in all classes.

Fleet Wings Win Title.

Another Boys Club of Washington team, coached by Charley Reynolds, tucked away another championship. This time it was the Boys Club Fleet Wings, a smartly trained quintet of shooters and dribblers, who smothered the woefully weak YMCA team, 32 to 7, to capture the 115-pound crown.

Strange as it may seem, the girls' unlimited game ended in a tie. Al's A. C., winner for the last three seasons, fought to a 20-to-20 deadlock with Sherwood, and tournament or no tournament, the girls' rules specify that another contest shall be played. This may come off Friday night.

Furr Will Battle Silas on Monday

Will Make First Defense of His District Title.

Fitful Philbert Furr, the retiring pugilist who retired so mysteriously a few months ago that the boxing commission had to subpena him for a hearing, will meet Sid Silas in a ten-round feature of Monday night's card at the auditorium. It will be Furr's first defense of his District welterweight title, which he won from Bob Wilson.

A supporting card comprised wholly of welterweights will be announced.

Silas, who bounced Roddy Davis all over the ring two shows ago and won a unanimous decision, yesterday inaugurated heavy work for the bout and is confident of being ready to hand "Fancy Phil" a fancy shellacking. This is Silas' big opportunity and nobody realizes it more than he.

American Booters To Play Italians

No material change in the lineups of the American and Italian soccer teams, which meet Sunday in the international final on Rosedale playground, has been announced by either manager, both being content to rely on the players who defeated Germany and Great Britain, respectively, in the opening games.

There is the possibility, however, that Italy will be without the services of Pete Chaconas, the sturdy center-half, having reported for baseball with the Richmond club this week. Dipol may be substituted, with Aquilino taking the left-half post. Efforts are being made to have Chaconas released for the day.

America, on its showing last week, is favored to win.

Well down the scoring list were several of the golfing great, among them Walter Hagen, Tommy Armour and Johnny Revolta, each with a 75.

Post Staff Photos.

The three lads pictured above are important cogs in Maryland's outdoor track squad which Coach Geary Eppley thinks will be the Terps' best in recent years. From left to right are Bill Guckeyson, discus heaver; Bob Boucher, high jump, and Coleman Headley, half-miler. All three are proficient in other sports. Guckeyson's specialty is football, but he's a three-letter man. Headley is a good basket ball player. Boucher prefers tennis. Maryland is expected to win all of its dual meets this spring, despite the fact that it will face some of the best teams in the South Atlantic sector. Veteran observers also look to the Terps to annex the Southern Conference championship in the annual jamboree at Raleigh, N. C.

LaRowe Blasts Proselyting Of Boxers

By Lewis F. Atchison.

A STINGING indictment of the increasing practice of proselyting college boxers, and a sharp rebuke to Maryland, Duke and North Carolina for certain uncomplimentary remarks emanating from those schools concerning the conduct of the last Southern Conference tournament were carried in last week's publication of College Topics, University of Virginia student publication.

While appearing innocent enough on the surface, the remarks—which are remarkably clear and pointed—carry enough dynamite to split the conference wide open and possibly lead to a drastic revision of the code governing athletic scholarships with particular regard to boxers.

Collapse Threatened.

The paper relates that LaRowe envisions a dismal collapse of the college ring game in the conference unless schools guilty of importing fighters remedy the evil. It is pointed out that winners of golden gloves and various other amateur tournaments are being encouraged to matriculate at schools desirous of placing a powerful team in the ring. An unhealthy regard for the box office receipts also is hinted.

LaRowe feels, according to College Topics, that a sane coach with a bona fide college team will forfeit bouts rather than risk serious injury to his own men when he knows they are going in against proselyted fighters. He points out that a college boxer can not expect to stand on equal footing with "college pros" who make fighting a year-round business.

Only one solution for the problem is possible if the game is to be saved, the paper says. Boxers who have previously fought or received experience from sources outside of prep, high schools or colleges must be prohibited from engaging in varsity competition.

College Topics takes Maryland, Duke and North Carolina to task for urging the removal of the tournament from Charlottesville in order to prevent Virginia from being the beneficiary of "home-town" decisions.

Credit to Cavaliers.

The paper voices the opinion that regardless of where the bouts are held the best team will win, and it gives full credit to the Cavalier clouters for their triumph in the 1935 championships. It further predicts that Virginia will win again next year if LaRowe can obtain the balance and courage that marked his squad's efforts this season.

LaRowe, who only recently arose from a sick bed, again is at the helm of the team and is directing a large squad of men in spring practice. He will have the 1935 team intact next season with exception of the two lighter weights, which will be left open by graduation.

Baer Predicts Primo Carnera Will Check Louis' Title Rush

By the Associated Press.

SACRAMENTO, Calif., March 27. Heavyweight Champion Max Baer predicted today that Primo Carnera would explode the meteoric rush of Detroit's sensational Negro fighter, Joe Louis.

At the same time Max calmly reassured the pugilistic world he would whack any and all challengers lopsided—whenever a title bout is arranged.

"I think Carnera will beat Louis when they fight in June," Max said. "Louis is young and still inexperienced, no matter how much they write about him in the papers. Take a look at his record and see if it doesn't bear me out. I wouldn't be so silly as to say he isn't a comer, but I know from experience he is a long way from the top.

"Louis may knock Carnera down, but you can bet plenty he'll get up. I haven't forgotten he was down and up so many times in my fight with him I got dizzy trying to keep track of the knockdowns, and I wasn't fooling when I hit him, either.

"If Carnera is in as good a physical condition as when he fought me, I think he will wear Louis out. The Italian will go into that match with plenty of determination. He'll work up a lot of psychology and say to himself, 'Primo, are you going to let this young upstart show you up?' Honestly, I think Louis due for a tough time.

"I read where Louis is promising to flatten Carnera in five rounds or so. From what I know of him, he doesn't go around making loose talk like that. His so-called friends maybe are making a lot of conversation for him.

"But no matter who comes out on top, I'll be on hand to give the ultimate winner a trouncing. They all look alike to Maxie when he gets them in the ring."

Baer reiterated he thought the New York State Athletic Commission's selection of James J. Braddock as No. 1 contender was a "big joke," a belief in which his manager, Ancil Hoffman, concurred.

U. championship last week with the biggest point-total ever rolled up by a Washington competitor, will compete in the National Senior A. A. U. indoor championships at the New York Athletic Club next week. Broaddus tallied more than 128 points to win the District title by a wide margin.

Broaddus will represent the Shoreham Swimming Club. Coach Edward H. McCrahon, of the Shoreham team, will accompany him to New York. Departure will be made Wednesday, giving Broaddus two days of practice in the N. Y. A. C. pool.

W. & M.'s Track Team Seen Strongest

Virginia U. Boasts Power; W. & L. and Richmond Hold High Hopes.

By the Associated Press.

RICHMOND, Va., March 27.—Track strength in the Old Dominion seemed today to be concentrated in five teams, with the Indians of William and Mary, on the eve of a giant-killer schedule, apparently packing the most punch.

Any school that has a star of the caliber of Monk Little has the nucleus for a fine track team, and the Indians are expecting their sensational captain to pace them through another remarkable season.

The University of Virginia, almost always among the State's finest, will show another strong team, although the dash men have to prove their ability; Washington and Lee should show increased strength; Richmond will be stronger, and the techman of V. P. I., although a dearth of weightmen will hurt their dual meet chances, are expecting to turn out a better combination.

V. M. I. is Weaker.

Coach "Son" Read, who at V. M. I. has trained some of the State's best trackmen, has a team apparently far below its usual strength, and other Virginia schools, although boasting a star or so here and there, can not match the power of the State's topnotchers.

Regardless of their team's fates in dual meets, glory beckoned for a galaxy of track stars, several of whom are ending their collegiate careers this season. Capt. Monk Little, one of the best broad jumpers in the country and one of the South's finest in the dashes and javelin, heads the pack.

There's Capt. Grover Everett, of Virginia, winner of the 110-meter high hurdles at the Penn relays and undefeated last season over the tall timbers; Richard Dunaj, Washington and Lee's star middle distance and distance runner, who is among the best 2-milers in the South; Ivan Mothershead, Tech's fine middle distance runner; Capt. Bill Schule, Washington and Lee's outstanding timber topper, who won over the low hurdles in the recent Southern Conference indoor meet; Roger Leverton, Richmond's fine hurdler, and Jimmy West, Spider captain, ace pole vaulter and a star in the broad and high jumps as well as a capable hurdler, and Gwynne Tayloe, V. M. I. sprinter.

Everett Point-Getter.

Virginia has a fine point-getter in Everett who combines excellent achievements in the broad jump with his performances over the hurdles. Sam Etheridge will add strength in the middle-distance runs and the Cavaliers have a fine duo in Bill Armstrong and John Call, pole vaulters.

Excellent balance, with Dunaj and Schule starring, promises an outstanding team at Washington and Lee, and Richmond, with Leverton and West due to hit their peaks this season, should do well. In addition to these two aces, the Red and Blue has in Woodrow Clark and "Horse" Walton a pair of javelin slingers who are flirting with the 200-foot mark.

Episcopal Nine Negotiating For Game

Young Men's Shop Sought for Alexandria Tilt on Saturday.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Powell is confronted with the task of rebuilding his entire pitching staff, and filling vacancies in the infield and outfield. The opening game with Culpeper High School is only ten days away. The four returning lettermen are Capt. Dillard, Wallace, Carter and Gordon, and newcomers who have shown a bit of promise are Bayly, third base; Duvall and Pollard, pitchers, and Harman, catcher.

A junior track team, composed of students under 16 years of age at Episcopal High School, will oppose the junior team of Woodberry Forest School in a dual meet this season. It will be the first time junior teams of the two schools have met, and is to be an annual affair.

Lee-Jackson Alumnae and Alexers, winners in the first block of the girls' independent basket ball tournament, oppose the St. Rita's and Fairsex Celtics teams, respectively, in the second block of the tourney at the Armory Hall Friday night. The final pairings for Saturday night will be announced after the games Friday night.

Ten local youthful court stars were honored on all-star teams chosen today by Tommy Lucas and Luke Latham, officials of the Alexandria Junior League.

southpaw, who may be due for another good year, and Monte Weaver, the mathematics professor who has had a hard time charting a winning course since his freshman season, complete the starting staff. Wally Stewart, veteran portsider, may be good for some "spots" but seems definitely on the decline. Jack Russell, Alphonse Thomas and Leon Pettit, a rookie right-hander, will do relief work.

The problem of getting effective results from such limited hurling resources is not diminished by the comparative inexperience of the backstopping department. Cliff Bolton, a robust hitter, will be the No. 1 receiver for the first time. His understudies, Jim Holbrook and Jack Redmond, are good prospects but hardly up to major league standards with nothing beyond class "A" experience behind them.

Red Kress at Short.

Red Kress has earned the spring call over Lyn Lary in the battle for Cronin's old position at shortstop. Jake Powell, slugging recruit from the Albany Internationals, may oust the veteran Fred Schulte in centerfield. Harris figures Kress and Powell will help supply a much-needed punch, though it will be hard to keep the faster and rangier Lary on the bench indefinitely. Powell is the fastest man on the team and a ball-hawk who compares favorably with the Cardinals' sensational newcomer, Terry Moore.

Otherwise and subject to the ability of the regulars to remain intact, the Senators are fortified to make a better showing. Joe Kuhel, although slowed down by the ankle he fractured in a game against the Tigers last June, is back on first base. Buddy Myers, at second base, and Cecil Travis, on third, are a lusty pair of .300 stickers. The outfield, with Heinie Manush and Jonathan Stone flanking Powell, packs a solid punch. Harris can call on Ossie Bluege for infield emergencies, and either Schulte or Fred Sington, the Alabama powerhouse, if an outfield switch is essential.

Potomac Edison Signs Outfielder

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Cumberland, Md., March 27.—Acquisition of Sammy Logsdon, outfielder who has played with the F. O. Eagles for the last four years, was announced last night by the Potomac Edison baseball club of the Interstate League.

The signing of Logsdon gives P. E. four outfielders, two of whom were with the club last season. Dick Fazenbaker and Julie Driver, the holdovers; Al Pannone, formerly of the American Legion and Cumberland Colts, and Logsdon are the new fly chasers. Logsdon batted .343 last year and stole 11 bases.

Joe Barley, second sacker of last year's championship team, will manage the Celanese A. A. this season, and his position will be filled by Johnny Thomas, former Celanese, F. O. Eagles and Midland player. Eugene "Dick" Bitter is almost certain to start at third base. Buskey will be at short and Bill Danner on first.

Sam Rainey, who led the league with a batting average of .429 and hammered out 45 hits in 105 trips to the plate, will do the bulk of the receiving for P. E., while Jim Stevenson, big right hander, who scored 14 wins in 15 starts, Robert "Lefty" Appel and Lester "Screw Ball" Bell will hurl.

Stocks Climb Upward With Light Offerings

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 27.—Wall street gloom lightened appreciably today. There was no rush to buy stocks, but bids were higher and offerings rather light.

Corporate and trade news was not startling, but on the whole appeared to offer more encouragement than in recent sessions. Electric power output figures for the last week rose a little more than seasonally, and the weekly review of Iron Age cited steel consumption as "holding at a relatively high level."

The market was able to make fair progress in most sections, with industrials and specialties leading the improvement. The Associated Press average for 60 stocks lifted 0.6 of a point to 36.3. Activity was restricted, however, with turnover at 462,490 shares.

The market expressed its disappointment over declaration of a $1 dividend by United States Smelting, compared with $3 paid in the last quarter, and the company's statement that earnings in the first two months of the current year were down to 45 cents, compared with $1.18 in the like period of 1934. The common stock broke to close 7¼ points lower at 108¼, aided perhaps by indications that the House silver bloc in Washington had failed to force retention of the Thomas silver amendment to the work relief bill.

Federal Backing of Collective Bargaining Legislation Arouses Fears of Further Industrial Warfare; Plants Speed Production.

By a Special Correspondent.

New York, March 27.—Although there has been no recurrence so far, this year of the costly epidemic of labor troubles which hampered American economic recovery during 1934, apprehensions on this score are increasing among industrialists. In fact, the fear of industrial warfare is probably as intense now as at any time since the Administration first sponsored collective bargaining legislation and thus gave unprecedented official encouragement to labor organizations to extend their membership and power.

It is an open secret in a number of industries that operations have been speeded up during the past few weeks to build up stocks on hand against possible cessation of work because of strikes.

In the automobile industry, developments during April will be watched very closely, for they may lead to a strike call for May 1. Elections of employe representatives have been held under the auspices of the National Automobile Labor Board. One company is said to have refused to treat with such elected employe representatives, which has led to considerable resentment among the workers. If other companies should adopt this attitude, and refuse to make some judicious concessions to the newly elected representatives of employes, a marked strengthening of the membership of the A. F. of L. union in the industry, encouraging the latter to call the scheduled strike, may be witnessed. In the meanwhile, the motor car manufacturers are steadily expanding their production schedules, so that they will have a large supply of cars in their own and dealers' hands if a stoppage should be forced at the end of April, a month which may well witness the peak output for the year.

Strike Is Threatening In Coal Regions.

In the coal industry, the strike threat is even more immediate. No agreement has yet been reached as to a new wages and hours scale to apply after April 1, when the present agreement expires. The United Mine Workers of America favors the pending Guffey bill for Federal regulation of the coal industry, and some operators believe that a strike is desired in order to strengthen congressional support for that measure.

Operators express a determination not to make further concessions in the way of shortening hours or raising wages, arguing that consumers are not in position to pay higher prices for coal, and to raise the cost of this fuel would merely encourage wholesale resort to substitutes. Large consumers are reported to have considerably more than normal stocks of coal on hand, which is a factor of encouragement to Washington.

On the other hand, recent unionization of previously non-union coal fields in the Southern producing area would make a protracted strike more serious than in former years.

In the textile industry, perhaps the chief fear at the moment is the reported movement under foot to unite the United Textile Workers with the strong garment trade unions of the North, to create an industry-wide union that would act as a unit in seeking concessions from employers. The textile workers received a serious setback in their abortive strike of last fall. However, if a united front could be established, a complete shutdown of the whole industry could be forced. Sidney Hillman, head of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union and member of the NIRB, is an avowed supporter of the industry, as against the craft, union principle. However, there is room for doubt that he would be willing to jeopardize the gains of his union of relatively highly paid workers by joining with the low-paid cotton mill workers in a common struggle in order to advance the organization of the latter.

Earnings Do Not Justify Wage Restorations.

The very poor earnings so far this year have convinced railroad executives they made a major mistake by restoring the 10 per cent pay cut of carrier employes by the agreement of last June. Very shortly after May 1, the managements will file notice with railroad unions of an intention to cut wages, perhaps by as much as 20 per cent. This dispute also may possibly lead to a walkout, railroad men say.

The increase in labor union representation on the National Industrial Recovery Board to equal that of industry, the apparent more favorable attitude of the Administration toward the Wagner trade disputes bill, and the growing support in Congress for 30-hour and similar legislation all encourage a more aggressive stand on the part of organized labor.

On the other hand, with business activity headed downward, with the upward trend in commodity prices reversed and with the profits outlook far from clear in many lines, industrialists are in a fighting mood to oppose further increases in labor costs.

Curb Is Narrow In Dull Session

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 27.—The curb market was unable to shake off its lethargy today and prices finished narrowly irregular. Transfers, which approximated 90,000 shares, were about the same as yesterday's.

National Sugar Refining dipped 1½ points on top of a similar decline in the previous session. Pittsburgh Plate Glass and Sherwin Williams lost about a point each, while fractional declines appear in Newmont Mining, Lake Shore, Hiram Walker and Distillers Corporation-Seagrams.

Utilities showed some improvement, with both American Gas & Electric and Electric Bond & Share establishing small gains. American Cyanamid "B" and Duval Texas Gulf also worked slightly higher, while A. O. Smith got up more than a point.

Chrysler Sales Gain.

New York, March 27.—Retail deliveries of Chrysler-made passenger cars and trucks totaled 15,606 units for the week ended March 23, which was 6.5 per cent above the previous week and 27.3 per cent above the corresponding week of 1934.

Canadian Dividends Reflect Advances

Toronto, March 27.—Dividend payments to stockholders of Canadian corporations in the month of March, and the first quarter of the year, again reflect improvement in general conditions in the Dominion. While disbursements for the current month, as reported to E. A. Pierce & Co., members of the New York and the Toronto Stock Exchanges, of $12,440,034 are below distributions of $18,505,085 for March 1934, and $19,437,457 for similar month two years ago, the decrease is entirely due to the policy adopted by two of Canada's leading companies of paying dividends semiannually, instead of each quarter as formerly.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London—A good undertone prevailed on the stock exchange today. After a general rise in the forenoon under the leadership of gilt-edged securities and industrials on favorable budget prospects, prices eased due to profit-taking and a slackening of support. German bonds weakened, while gold mining and silver shares were cheerful. The market closed irregular.

Paris—Prices were strong on the bourse today, armament stocks being the market leaders. Rubber issues were also strong and active, while rentes, which declined during the early trading, closed firmer. The closing tone was firm.

Berlin—Irregularity developed on the boerse today after a weak opening. Mining shares were favored, and the market closed cheerful.

THREE MEN AND DIANA

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

DIANA got up stiffly, stiffly set about her morning offices; the kettle was filled, bread was sliced, Diana finally sat down to her breakfast with a sigh—she was always tired nowadays.

"I wish we had a hundred a month between us, Michael."

Instead of a hundred she had $17; she had borrowed $25 from her old firm; they wanted her back.

In November she tried to wean Michael, but it was not a success and the baby was ill. Frantic with love and fear, Diana abandoned all thought of leaving him, and clinging to him desperately she sat on the edge of her bed through one whole dull, cold, silent winter afternoon, thinking.

The next morning, carrying him, she went to an intelligence office. She could do general housework, but she must have the baby with her.

Mrs. Pollet was not encouraging. Diana, to her, did not look strong enough for general housework, and no matter what she took or tried, she must place the baby somewhere. To take a 2-month-old baby into a position was not thinkable for an instant.

Neal Was Back.

"I'd have to wean him," Diana said, tears running down her face.

"They get along just as well."

"They can't!"

Her face burned with bitter color as she left the offices, but she was pale enough when she reached the street, and shifted Michael on her arm and started toward the Valencia street car.

She was standing on the mid-street safety station, waiting for it to come along, in the long string of cars, when some one touched her arm. Diana looked up and saw Neal Tressady beside her.

"Diana!" he said limply, with a blank stare that took in her pallor, her thinness and weariness and shabbiness, and the strange burden on her arm.

She half laughed and half sobbed. She leaned against him. She would not fall; she clung to him resolutely; she must not faint.

He Took Her Home.

"Taxi," she said, with effort. They were in one, jogging along slowly; Neal was holding the baby, she herself resting against Neal's shoulder. But she could not see him or the baby; she could not open her eyes.

"Diana, darling—you're fainting! When did you eat?"

"I'm all right." It was merely a whisper. "Just—just give me a minute."

"Where'll I take you? Where's home?"

"I can't go there."

"We'll go to my place, then. That'll be all right, won't it?"

"Anywhere——"

They went upstairs in an elevator and into the brightest and most compact apartment Diana had seen for a long while.

"Feel all right?"

Neal Was Excited.

"I'm all right, now." One hand went to her disordered hat, her straggling hair. "Neal, I must look a disgrace."

"Who's the kid?"

"Mine."

"The hell!" Neal observed simply. "He's starving. If I could mop him up a little I'd feed him—Diana began, looking vaguely about.

"Take him in the bathroom. Lissen, Di——" It was the old phrase; the old eager Neal. "I was going to a rehearsal when I met you. I'm opening in Ysoble next week. Lissen, will you stay here? I'll be back—it's just noon—I'll be back at 2. Stay here, will you? I'll only be an hour. It's just one part of one act—they had to put a new maid in. We've had 17 weeks in L. A.—broke the record. Lissen, will you wait?"

His Sympathy Awakened.

"I'll wait, Neal."

He was gone. She could feed her child, lay him down, banked with pillows, on a wide clean bed, move about peacefully. She was saved. Diana drank deep of the exquisite relief of it all.

When Neal returned, Michael was asleep and Diana in a deep chair looking out at the panorama that was spred beneath the windows.

"My God, what you've been through!"

"Only this last few weeks were really bad."

"And they don't admit that you and Bruce were married?"

"The Palmers? I believe not."

"What a crust!" Neal commented, musing. "You're so lovely," he mumbled, in the remembered way, his lips against her hand.

He was very handsome, handsomer than she remembered him; thinner, older, more definite. His skin was clean and smooth and his hair more picturesque than ever. And he was as always eager, emotional, appreciative.

Her Life Was Saved.

"I think I would have died if I had to go back to my own place tonight, Neal."

"You're not married again?"

"Married? I'll say I'm not! No, but she and I scrapped."

"You and your mother?" Diana laughed joyously. Companionship was delicious, after her long loneliness, and Neal was the same old sixpence—half genius, half idiot, half wiseacre, half child.

"Yep. She thought I was drinking and booming too much."

Diana widened reproachful eyes.

"And were you, Neal?"

He got up and walked to the window and looked out. When he spoke it was out of a deep study that had nothing to do with her question.

"I shall never love—I never have loved—any other woman but you."

"As a matter of fact," he added, as she was silent, "you love me a lot more than you think. I know you."

A Home Offered.

"I could marry you, of course," she said thoughtfully. "It'd mean a home for Mickey and me—it'd mean companionship—and I've been horribly lonely!"

Neal would be "nice" most of the time; he always had been. He would be companionable, eager, adoring; he would help with kitchen meals, share his money generously, keep their domicile, wherever and whatever it might be, in a continual cheerful uproar.

She would be his wife and his mother, too. She could remember the old tone: "Ah, darling, you're imagining that. Forgive me, dear, if I seemed to be having too good a time! I wasn't, really. I was waiting for the moment when you and I could get away——"

And so on, adfinitum. One rarely talked quite honestly to Neal. One felt one's way cautiously to his mood, tried this cure, tried that.

She tried to escape. She went to her old firm, was offered the old salary; they wanted her back at $25 a week. She could put Mickey in a home somewhere.

She Was Taken Ill.

And then, quite suddenly, at the last moment, when her anxious search for a new lodging—then Diana was ill. It was only influenza, but it was a sharp attack.

When she was getting well, weakened, broken, pale, Neal sat beside her bed, on a low hassock, and kissed her cool hand, and they talked it over. He wouldn't—he wouldn't ever blame her that it wasn't a girl's wild love.

On the first day that she was well enough to leave the house a shaky spring day with a smell of lilac and wet sidewalks in the air, she and he went up to the city hall and were married.

Marriage Was Unreal.

She had been married a month. But the words, the dates meant nothing. Diana was in a strange dream; instead of awakening her to a simpler, a relieved and rested mood, her marriage had only plunged her deeper into bewilderment and unreality.

When Michael came home, cold, rosy, ravenous, demanding instant attention, Diana carried him off to the big bathroom that, with a narrow strip of kitchen, completed the apartment.

"But Neal, just a minute——" She drew him aside. I've let Lottie go—you know how she is——"

His face—the others could not see it—was black. He frowned, spoke impatiently:

"Not alone, in this fire trap."

"Oh, talk—talk!" he interrupted her. "You could, and any other woman would. But you're so cracked about that kid—and I'm playing every other night, this is my one night——"

The problem of Michael grew worse as time went on. Neal, from the beginning, was jealous of the baby.

"Is there any reason he shouldn't be with his grandparents?" he asked more than once. And Diana suffered from apprehension as to the future whenever he talked of sending little Michael away.

Strange as It Seems —By John Hix

The "baby elephant" in the above drawing is a type of mole of which two species are known. Its most distinguishing feature is its long, prehensile nose, something like the elephant's trunk, with which it feels for and picks up food. Its nose is so long, flexible and well muscled that it can wrap it around a morsel of food.

The desman lives along stream banks in the Pyrenees and elsewhere. It is a good swimmer, using its flat tail to propel it through the water. It lives chiefly on insects, leeches, and similar food.

Treason, in general terms, is the crime of attacking the safety of a sovereign state or its head. It is not fully defined in English common law, but is provided for in the treason act. In the United States treason is strictly defined: "Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort."

Strange as it seems, however, old English law recognized two kinds of treason, petty and high. The term as we know it now is high treason, while petty treason was a form of homicide. It included, as defined by the statute of 25 Edward III, 1352, murder of a husband by his wife, murder of a master by his servant, and murder of a prelate or other ecclesiastical person by his subordinate.

On the Air Today

By Katherine Smith.

Hal Kemp, bandsman, herewith offers radio moguls an amateur idea—all nicely served up on a gold plated microphone. Hal believes that the present sytem is all wet, inasmuch as the winning amateurs can't get good jobs on the strength of their triumphs and that if they do get jobs they are on obscure stations. Aso, that no orchestra will hire a singer or instrumentalist with the sole qualification: "Well, I won first place on Blank's Amateur Hour.""

So Hal thinks it would be a good idea to reverse the present process. Amateur eliminations should start with small stations, winners decided by the local vote. Then they would compete at, say, the State elimination, advance to semi-finals, so that by the time they were ready for the big amateur test they'd have some radio experience, and more ability than is on the present amateur network programs.

In a small way, Ray Perkins' outfit has done just this in their tie-up with Fox theaters. If this graduated system of elimination could be carried out all over the country, New York would be treated to the best and network programs to a rather superior line-up of nonprofessional talent.

Kate Smith, in her city-to-city talent hunt, has managed to collect a good group of hopefuls, and, at the same time, spare the listener the anguish of listening to those with little ability. Other network programs may cite cases of aspirants coming from all over the country, but usually they have packed their hopes with their toothbrushes, and lost them with their last dollar bill.

Hal's idea seems sound. What do other professionals think?

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Cesarean Birth.

IN THESE days of better hospital facilities, clean surgery and superior training on the part of physicians specializing in midwifery, many lives are saved through what is known as Cesarean section.

The operation is not new and numerous references are found in historical literature dating from very early times. The use of the word "Caesaran" in this special sense is supposed to have originated with the birth of Julius Caesar (100-44 B. C.). That Caesar's birth occurred in this manner is disproved by the fact that his mother lived for many years thereafter. It is impossible to conceive that any mother could have survived the crude surgery of that time. For centuries, the operation was rarely attempted except to preserve the life of an infant following the death of his mother. With the modern advances in surgical technique, Cesarean section has become much more common and the conditions governing its employment have been more clearly defined.

It sometimes happens that deformities of the bones of the pelvis, tumors, heart disease and certain other conditions indicate danger to the mother should normal labor be allowed to proceed. Because the Cesarean operation is less dangerous to mother and child under these conditions, it is now employed with relative safety.

So much progress has been made in the careful handling of the lying-in mother that the operation should not be required in more than 1 or 2 per cent of all cases. Under ideal conditions, and with the management of the case in the hands of a skilful, highly trained obstetrician, the procedure can not be said to be dangerous. It must be pointed out, however, that the operation is sometimes performed by improperly trained and inexperienced physician with the result that the maternal death rate in certain localities is increased.

The method differs in no wise from thousands of operations performed daily in the hospitals of the country. When the operation is clearly indicated, it is life-saving in character and may be ranked as one of the landmarks in surgical progress.

It is believed by some that if a mother has undergone a Cesarean operation future pregnancies will not occur or, if they do, they can not be survived. This is entirely erroneous. Many mothers have proceeded from one Cesarean section to another, or from a Cesarean section to a succeeding normal birth.

Ninty-eight per cent of expectant mothers under proper care will go through pregnancy normally and will not require surgical intervention. The modern use of anesthesia, outdoor life and exercise, the absence of tight clothing, and other hygienic factors, all make for safety in childbirth. When Cesarean section is clearly indicated, however, there is nothing that will take its place—no method that is equally safe for mother and child.

Walt Mason, Himself

Helping Hand.

In Punktown we are glad to feed those men distressed who throng the roads, poor delegates, all gone to seed, with no resources, no abodes. They wander in from East and West, the old, the hungry and the lame, and each one is a welcome guest if he's inclined to play the game. We take a highly moral stand, we don't believe in giving food, but we'll extend the helping hand to fellows who will saw some wood. And just behind the city hall we have a woodpile fine and high, with cordwood large and cordwood small, and cordwood wet and cordwood dry. A stalwart pilgrim ambles in, and says he's surely nearly dead; he says he's growing weak and thin, because he lacks his daily bread. "I can't get work," he sadly cries, "although I'd tackle any task, that would produce some custard pies, or sauerkraut in a can or cask. I ask for work on bended knees, I ask for work at every door ,and people spring the same old wheeze, they are not hiring any more." We tell him that he need not starve while he's among our kindly folk, and he may have good meat to carve if he will saw a cord of oak. We try to lead him to the yard where bucksaws wait in shining pairs, but all that sort of work is barred by his physicians, he declares. The higher places then he hits, in his desire to get away; to see a woodpile gives him fits, and spoils for him a sunny day. And so we try in vain to aid the helpless ones whose woes are ripe; they never seem inclined to trade their labor for a slice of tripe.

2 Are Indicted In Alleged Plot To Evade Taxes

Revenue Aid, Companion Said to Have Offered Data to Company Illegally.

An indictment charging a reviewer in the Bureau of Internal Revenue and a former Reconstruction Finance Corporation employe with conspiring to defraud the United States and attempting to obtain payment for services in connection with an income tax matter was returned by the District grand jury yesterday.

Those indicted were Warren L. Heap, the reviewer, and Guy S. Burtis. The indictments allege the men conspired to reveal to the Amer Mining Co., of Colorado, the fact that an assessment of $208,000 was to be levied against the company as a part of its 1932 income tax. Heap is accused of getting the information as reviewer and giving it to Edward E. Wheeler, an officer of the company.

Wheeler Not Authorized.

The count charging Heap and Burtis conspired to defraud the United States alleges Wheeler "was not authorized by law to receive information regarding facts relating to the case of the Amer Mining Co." which was pending before the bureau.

The indictment also charges that the two men communicated with Wheeler, who is also president of the Colorado Public Service Corporation, and offered to show how the tax claim could be abated. In return for this, it is set forth, they were to receive a percentage of the money refunded.

Letter Is Cited.

Among the alleged overt acts cited was a letter written by Burtis to "Dear Ed," who was identified as Mr. Wheeler. The letter pointed out that the author did not want to dictate to a Government stenographer, and continued:

"I don't want to go into the details in writing, but can say as positively as you can anything that we can get half voided with a good chance of getting it all canceled. * * * Twenty per cent of the amount saved should be a fair fee. * * * Your division would be a third or a fourth, depending on how it is to be handled."

Fire Captain Hurt As Crash Injures 3

Man and Woman Other Victims of Collision.

One man was seriously injured and a captain in the Fire Department and a woman received lacerations in an automobile crash at Third and H streets northwest last night.

The man seriously injured has been tentatively identified as Fred Klatzbough. His skull fractured, he is at Sibley Hospital. He was a passenger in a car driven by Capt. Pinkney Cross, Fire Department, who lives at 4343 Thirty-ninth street northwest. Capt. Cross was treated at Casualty Hospital for severe lacerations of the face and arms. He said he only knew Klatzbough's last name.

Capt. Cross' car was in a collision with an automobile operated by Daniel W. Miller, of 1426 Foxhall road northwest. Miller was unhurt, but Mrs. Helen G. Smith, of 1512 Foxhall road northwest, a passenger, received lacerations of the face.

Boy, 13, Struck in Eye By Air-Rifle Pellet

The youth, police said, was shot accidentally while playing near his home. A playmate, standing on the rear porch of a house nearly a block away, fired into the air and Fishman was hit. Physicians said his condition is not serious.

The Federal Diary

(Trade-Mark Applied For.)

By Morgan Baker.

SCORING again in its program to provide practical courses of study for Government employes, the Graduate School of the Department of Agriculture announces a special ten-week course in the "Elements of Personnel Administration," beginning April 5, under direction of Dr. A. F. Woods.

BAKER.

Since this subject should be of interest to all Federal people, the Graduate School has waived the usual college prerequisites and placed the fee at a very nominal figure. The customary two periods a week will be combined and held on Fridays from 4:45 to 6:15 p. m. in order to reduce to a minimum class attendance inconvenience.

Nationally known men have been engaged to conduct the lectures, each an expert in his field. Dr. Leonard D. White, Civil Service Commissioner, who contributed his time and advice in developing the course, heads the list. Other prominent authorities in personnel administration who will appear in the series of lectures include:

Dr. Ordway Tead, author and lecturer in personnel subjects at Columbia University; Dr. H. S. Person, author and lecturer in scientific management and formerly head of the Taylor Society; Dr. W. J. Donald, managing director, National Electrical Manufacturers Association, New York; Dr. W. W. Stockberger, personnel director, Agriculture, and Dr. Herman Feldman, professor of industrial relations, Dartmouth College.

This course was developed as a result of recommendations by the Civil Service Commission, Personnel Classification Board, investigators and personnel officers of the Government.

The lecture class in "Elements of Personnel Administration" is essentially a study of the management of employes. The lectures will cover not only the theory and principles of personnel administration, but actual technique and methods developed through research and tested by the experience of progressive private organizations.

Subjects to be covered include inspecting, evaluating, planning, coordinating and measuring output; incentive and impulsion; training on the job; technique of supervision; job analysis; discipline; and complaints and how to handle them. The presentation will be popular rather than technical and will be of interest and value both to supervisors and those supervised.

Mimeographs or reprints taken from the outstanding books on subjects of personnel administration will be used in the course to integrate and supplement the lectures. However, those not taking the course for credit neither need to do the reading nor take examinations.

Since many individuals in departments other than Agriculture have expressed an interest in this course, the Graduate School, in addition to accepting registrations at its office, Room 4090 South Building, from 9 a. m. to 5:30 p. m. daily, will accept registration by mail.

Judging from the generous response by the Tariff Commission to the drive to raise a sustaining fund for the National Symphony Orchestra, there are many music lovers in the organization. So far the subscriptions from the commission have totaled $80, with more in sight.

OUT of more than 100,000 Sirovich questionnaires tabulated to date perhaps the most extraordinary development yet to come to notice is the receipt of a questionnaire from a woman who is quite convinced that she is overpaid.

She is receiving $1,980 a year, and in response to the query, "What do you think you should be paid?" she replies, "$1,800," and accentuates her nonconformity to the general practice by the statement that she does not think anyone ought to receive more than $1,800 for work of the type she is doing.

She submits the only anonymous questionnaire yet received, out of the tremendous number already tabulated, dismissing the request for name and job status with the remark that this information "is not material."

In general her replies to the questionnaire are at variance with the views of most Government workers. However, she seems to be strongly of the opinion that Government employes should elect at least one member of the Civil Service Board of Appeals, if and when it is set up.

DR. LEONARD D. WHITE, Civil Service Commissioner, who assisted in organizing the course in personnel administration at the Graduate School of the Department of Agriculture, leads the list of nationally known personnel experts who will lecture to Government employe students.

Membership Gains Reported.

Continued large membership gains are being reported to headquarters of the National Federation of Federal Employes by local unions in all parts of the country, it was announced last night by Miss Gertrude McNally, secretary-treasurer.

Reporting on a meeting which she attended at Lorton, Va., Miss McNally stated that Local Union, No. 84, has gained nearly 200 members in recent weeks. The meeting, addressed by Miss McNally and Elmer E. Imlay, jr., of national headquarters staff, attracted more than 100 employes. Both speakers discussed legislative and departmental activities and emphasized the importance of continued vigorous membership work at this time.

Diary Guest Tickets.

IF F, P or C follows your name in this column, call in person on the Federal Diary editor between 4:30 and 6 p. m. today. You will receive tickets to one of the following Loew's theaters: (F) Loew's Fox (stage, Herb Williams, Danny Dare Dancers and other acts; screen, Maurice Chevalier and Merle Oberon in "Folies Bergere"); or to (P) Loew's Palace (Will Rogers, Richard Cromwell and Jane Darwell in "Life Begins at 40"); or to (C) Loew's Columbia (Edmund Lowe and Victor McLaglen in "Under Pressure").

Ramspeck to Be Honored.

Representative Robert Ramspeck, chairman of the House Civil Service Committee, will be honored at a mass meeting and reception under auspices of the three Philadelphia lodges of the American Federation of Government Employes next Wednesday night.

E. Claude Babcock, president; Cecil E. Custer and Col. Charles I. Stengle, of the national offices of the federation, will be among the speakers. Members of Congress from Philadelphia and high State officials are expected to attend.

Joseph W. Hiscox, chief, Division of Exhibits, Agriculture, is busily engaged in getting an exhibit prepared, shipped and installed in a Federal Building (yet to be built) at the California Pacific International Exposition which opens at San Diego May 29. Mr. Hiscox recently was appointed Federal commissioner for the exposition.

A BENEVOLENT organization, "The Orchid Club," has just made its appearance in the Bureau of Traffic, Interstate Commerce Commission, with Edward J. Long (F), as president. Its purpose is to see that sick employes are given attention with flowers. The club hopes to eliminate the frequent collections made around the office. Other officers include Mrs. Mary K. Werner (P), secretary, and Henry J. Vinskey (C), treasurer.

Manhattan Promenade.

Calling all cars—calling all cars—there is a man at Forty-ninth street, singing "Isle of Capri," Public Song Enemy No. 1 . . . Car 29 and Car 36 will rush there immediately and shoot to kill, if necessary. Other cars in neighborhood stand by: Long thin man, at corner of Forty-seventh street, is singing "Wagon Wheels," wanted at Headquarters as Public Enemy No. 2. Seize him and destroy orchestrations. Calling all cars, calling all cars—Car 86, 43 and 27 rush immediately to Times Square. Proceed with caution. Man with long criminal record is singing "Old Man River," Public Enemy No. 3, and is doing "Pardon My Southern Accent" as an encore. You can kill two birds with one stone. Muss him up good, the Police Commissioner says. All other cars are to proceed on roving assignment . . . "The Man on the Flying Trapeze," Public Enemy No. 4, is consorting with Public Enemy No. 5, "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling"—overpower them at any cost.

* * * *

You might think from the above that I don't like (1) "Isle of Capri," (2) "Wagon Wheels," (3) "Old Man River," (4) "Pardon My Southern Accent," (5) "The Man on the Flying Trapeze," (6) "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling"—and you are right. I am fed up to here with all of them. The first 200 times I heard the beautiful "Isle of Capri," I didn't mind it. But enough is enough. I'm fed up with "Wagon Wheels," too. The next barytone who tries it in my presence will have to fight his way out of the joint. That goes for "Old Man River," in spades. Deep-voiced guys have been totin' that barge and lifting that bale for years now, and if these deep-voiced guys are too weak to get the job done, let's call the whole thing off. In a mechanical age, I think we can skip "Wagon Wheels" if you'd be so kindly, pliz. That is a thoroughly silly song, 'cause they ain't no more wagons. But tall, thin men persist in singing it, and if all the clowns who turn cute with "The Man on the Flying Trapeze" were laid end to end, it would be good riddance.

* * * *

You can always tell when a singer is going to unburden himself of "Old Man River." At the first bars of the song, the singer gets what can best be described as that "Lousay-Louisiana-Levee Look. This is not to be confused with the Daring-Dopey Look which spreads over his face when he switches to "The Man on the Flying Trapeze," which evidently requires a coy treatment. "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling," Public Enemy No. 6, calls for wistfulness, and "Pardon My Southern Accent" is what I'd call a You-All song. I mean, you-all will get it whether you want it or not.

* * * *

There are other songs which are studying to be Public Enemies. Arthur Tracy, the Street Singer, has been doing very creditable work with "Martha," and while this hasn't been accepted as a mobster, I believe this will make the grade sooner or later. Benny Davis' "Margie" may not be a Public Enemy, but only because of its sex. Songs like "Martha," "Margie," "Sweet Adeline," "Annie Doesn't Live Here Any More," "Rose of Washington Square," etc., etc., are Gun Molls rather than Public Enemies. However, I am in favor of shooting down singers who sing these female-title songs, because we should not be too tender-hearted. After all, these affect the commonwealth, and if "Margie" and "Martha" and "Mother Machree" insist on woman's suffrage, they must be prepared to accept equal punishment.

Gil Boag adds some interesting comment on yesterday's column, which discussed the greatest box office attractions of the past 20 years in vaudeville, and I reprint from his letter: "Dear Ed—Gilda Gray 'shimmied' through 22 cities in 1926 and 1927, making personal appearances with her 'Aloma of the South Seas' and grossed over $1,000,000. The top gross for a single week was a little more than $79,000 during the second week at the Michigan Theater, Detroit. However, this immense gross included a midnight charity performance for flood sufferers, at $5 tops. Her highest pay for any one week was $16,876 on a percentage basis at the Metropolitan, Los Angeles."

Live Wire Fells Railway Employe

For the second time in as many days a Pennsylvania Railroad employe was seared by electricity while on the job on the right of way of the railway at Second and I streets northeast.

Charles A. Knabe, 23, painter, of Harrisburg, Pa., touched a live wire while he was working atop a car within a few feet of the spot where Thomas Sherrill, 23, an assistant foreman, met death Tuesday.

Knabe, witnesses said, seized a dangling wire, crumpled, and hurtled to the platform below. He was rushed to Emergency Hospital, with first, second and third degree burns. Physicians hold slight hope for his recovery.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald, investigating Sherrill's death yesterday, said he was killed by his 20-foot fall from a work tower to the tracks, and not by the electric shock.

Illegal Sale of Beer Costs Dealer His Permit

The license of Harry Maisel, 1824 North Capitol street, was revoked yesterday by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board for violations of the liquor regulations.

Maisel was charged with having sold beer for consumption off the premises while he held a license for sale for consumption on the premises. The revocation is effective April 1.

Strike Vote Is Set In Goodyear Plant

By the Associated Press.

Akron, Ohio, March 27.—Strike threats grew more ominous tonight at three of the Nation's largest automobile tire factories here.

Officers of the American Federation of Labor rubber works union at the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. called a strike vote for Sunday, and leaders of the same union planned similar votes at the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. and the B. F. Goodrich Co. a week later.

Labor leaders claim at least 12,000 of the estimated 35,000 workers in these plants are members of the A. F. of L. union. Company officials said the union membership is much lower.

The decision to propose a strike to the union members followed an announcement today that the Firestone and Goodrich companies would join the Goodyear in refusing to sign agreements with the American Federation of Labor.
